I. Abraham's Solicitude for a Wife for Isaac (vv. 1-9).

He knew that Isaac's success in life would much depend upon what kind of a wife he should have. Man's welfare in this life and that to come largely depends upon his wife. For Isaac to have an idolatrous, Canaanitish wife would be fatal to his posterity, would subvert the plan of God as expressed in his covenant with Abraham. It would have been perilous to Isaac himself. To have married a woman in that land would have made him in a sense an heir to the land through marriage, and would have tended to divert his mind from the heirship through the covenant promise.

1. The Servant's Oath (vv. 2-4). Abraham committed to his trusted servant the matter of securing a wife for Isaac; therefore, he made him swear that he would go to Abraham's country and kindred to get a wife for him. He doubtless regarded his servant more competent to select a wife than Isaac was to select one for himself.

2. The Extent of the Servant's Responsibility (vv. 5, 8). Before the servant would take the oath he must have clearly defined the extent of his responsibility. If the woman would refuse the invitation, the servant would be clear of responsibility. The minister's obligation ends when he has earnestly and intelligently made known to sinners the will of God.

3. The Servant's Helper (v. 8). Abraham assured him that God would send his angel to make the mission successful. The servant found this to be true. God sends his Holy Spirit to make the message of the minister successful.

II. The Servant's Obedience (vv. 10-49).

1. He Took Ten Camels (v. 10). These were to carry presents to the bride, and to conduct her and her companions back to his master.

2. His Prayer for Guidance (vv. 12-14). He asked that the Lord would guide him to the woman whom he had chosen for Isaac. Earnest prayer for guidance should be made in the selection of a wife.

3. His Prayer Answered (vv. 15-27). Before he had done praying, the answer was realized to be in the process of fulfillment. The answer was according to the request, even in the matter of fulfillment. God does definitely answer prayer.

4. The Servant's Message (vv. 33-49). The Lord had prospered the old servant's way. He now was face to face with Rebecca. Supper was ready, but the delivery of his message was more important to him than eating when he was hungry. He said, "I will not eat till I have said my errand." Good were it if all ministers were as much interested in delivering the good news in Christ. (1) His master was rich (v. 35). God the Heavenly Father is rich. The silver and gold and the cattle upon a thousand hills are all his. (2) All his riches have been given to his son (v. 36). All the riches of heaven, God the Father has given to Jesus Christ, his son. (3) Opportunity was given Rebecca to become the wife of Isaac (v. 49). He not only gave the opportunity, but he urged her to accept the invitation.

III. Rebecca's Relatives Begging for Postponement of Action (v. 55).

They did not object to her going sometime, but they desired that she postpone action for a time. What folly to remain and water sheep when she had the opportunity to become the bride of a rich man's son.

What folly for sinners to remain servants in the world when they have the privilege of becoming the bride of Christ.

IV.—Rebecca's Glorious Decision. (v. 55).

When the decision was referred to Rebecca she said, "I will go." Good judgment would not allow her to refuse nor delay.

V. The Meeting of Isaac and Rebecca (vv. 64-67).

Isaac was waiting for the return of the servant with the woman who was to be his wife. Isaac was joined to her in marriage, loved her, and was comforted in her after his mother's death.

Nervous and All Unstrung?

Feel nervous and irritable all the time? Continually worry over trifles? Then there's something wrong. Back of it all may be weak kidneys. Just as nerve wear is a cause of kidney weakness, so is kidney trouble a cause of nervousness. If you have backache, "blues," nervous spells, headaches, dizzy spells, kidney irregularities and a tired, worn feeling, try Doan's Kidney Pills. They are recommended by thousands.

JOSEPH STAGG IS FILLED WITH DISMAY WHEN HE LEARNS CAROLYN HAS BEEN LEFT TO HIS CARE.

Synopsis.—Her father and mother reported lost at sea when the Dunraven, on which they had sailed for Europe, was sunk, Carolyn May Cameron—Hannah's Carolyn—is sent from New York to her bachelor uncle, Joseph Stagg, at the Corners. The reception given her by her uncle is not very enthusiastic. Carolyn is also chilled by the stern demeanor of Aunty Rose, Uncle Joe's housekeeper.

The window was open and she went to it and looked out. A breath of honeysuckle blew in. Then, below, on the porch, she heard the uneasy movements of Prince. And he whined.

"Oh, poor Princey! He doesn't know what's become of me," thought Carolyn May.

Downstairs, in the great kitchen, Aunty Rose was stepping back and forth, from table to sink, from sink to dresser, from dresser to pantry. As the daylight faded she lit the lamp which swung from the ceiling and gave light to all the room.

It would have been impossible for the wisest person to guess what were the thoughts in Aunty Rose's mind.

A glad little yelp from the dog tied to the rail of the porch sounded suddenly. Even Aunty Rose could not mistake that cry of welcome and she knew very little about dogs—to their credit, at least. She had heard no other suspicious sound, but now she crossed the room with firm tread and opened the porch door. Yes, a little white figure was down there hugging the whining mongrel.

Carolyn May's tearful face was raised from Prince's rough neck.

"Oh, Aunty Rose! Oh, Aunty Rose!" she sobbed. "I just had to say good night to somebody. Edna's mother came and heard our prayers and tucked us into my bed after my papa and mamma went away. So it didn't seem so bad.

"But tonight—why! tonight there isn't anybody cares whether I go to bed or not! But Prince! Prince, he knows just how—how empty I feel!"

"You would better come in now and wash your face and hands again before going to bed. That dog has been lapping them with his tongue.

Sobbing, the little girl obeyed. Then she would have gone back up the stairs without a word had not Aunty Rose spoken.

"Come here, Carolyn May," she said quite as sternly as before.

The little girl approached her. The old lady sat in one of the straightest of the straight-backed chairs, her hands in her comfortable lap. The wet blue eyes were raised to her composed face timidly.

"If you wish to say your prayers here, before going upstairs, you may, Carolyn May," she said.

"Oh, may I?" gasped the little girl. She dropped her hands into Aunty Rose's lap. Somehow they found those larger, comforting hands and cuddled into them as the little girl sank to her knees on the braided mat.

If the simple "Now I lay me" was familiar to Aunty Rose's ear from long ago she gave no sign. When the earnest little voice added to the formal supplication a desire for the blessing of "Uncle Joe and Aunty Rose" the latter's countenance retained its composure.

She asked a blessing upon all her friends, including the Prices, and even Prince. But it was after that she put the timid question to Aunty Rose that proved to be almost too much for that good woman's studied calm.

"Aunty Rose, do you s'pose I might ask God to bless my mamma and papa, even if they are lost at sea? Somehow I don't think it would seem so lonesome if I could keep that in my prayer."

CHAPTER III.

"Well—She'll Be a Nuisance."

Mr. Joseph Stagg, going down to his store, past the home and carpenter shop of Jedidiah Parlow, at which he did not even look, finally came to his destination in a very brown study. So disturbed had he been by the arrival of his little niece that he forgot to question and cross-question young Chetwood Gormley regarding the possible customers that had been in the store during his absence.

"And I tell you what I think, mother," Chet said, with his mouth full, at supper that evening. "I think her coming's going to bring about changes. Yes, ma'am!"

Mrs. Gormley was a faded little woman—a widow—who went out sewing for better-to-do people in Sunrise Cove. She naturally thought her boy Chetwood a great deal smarter than other people thought him.

"You know, mother," he said, on this evening of the arrival of Carolyn May, "I never have seen any great chance to rise, workin' for Mr. Joseph Stagg.'

"But he pays you, Chet," his mother said anxiously.

"Yep. I know. Don't be afraid I'll leave him till I see something better," he reassured her. "But I might be clerkin' for him till the cows come home and never see more'n six or eight dollars a week. But now it's apt to be different."

"How different, Chet?" she asked, puzzled.

"You know Mr. Stagg's as hard as nails—as hard as the goods he sells," declared the gawky boy. "Mind you, he don't do nothin' mean. That ain't his way. But he don't seem to have a mite of interest in anything but his shop. Now, it seems to me, this little niece is bound to wake him up. He calls her 'Hannah's Car'lyn.'"

"Hannah Stagg was his only sister," said Mrs. Gormley softly. "I remember her."

"And she's just died, or something, and left this little girl," Chet continued. "Mr. Stagg's bound to think of something now besides business. And mebbe he'll need me more. And I'll get a chance to show him I'm worth something to him. So, by and by, he'll put me forward in the business," said the boy, his homely face glowing. "Who knows? Mebbe it'll be Stagg & Gormley over the door one of these days. Stranger things have happened."

Perhaps even Chetwood's assurance would have been quenched had he just then known the thoughts in the hardware merchant's mind. Mr. Stagg sat in his back office poring over the letter written by his brother-in-law's lawyer friend, a part of which read:

If the Simple "Now I Lay Me" Was Familiar to Aunty Rose's Ear She Gave No Sign.

> From the above recital of facts you will plainly see, being a man of business yourself, that Mr. Cameron's financial affairs were in a much worse condition when he went away than he himself dreamed of.
> I immediately looked up the Stonebridge Building and Loan association. It is even more moribund than the papers state. The fifteen hundred dollars Mr. Cameron put into it from time to time might just as well have been dropped into the sea.
> You know he had only his salary on the Morning Beacon. They were rather decent to him, when they saw his health breaking down, to offer him the chance of going to the Mediterranean as correspondent. He was to furnish articles on "The Debris of a World War"—stories of the peaceful sections of Europe which have to care for the human wrecks from the battlefields.
> It rather cramped Mr. Cameron's immediate resources for your sister to go with him, and he drew ahead on his expense and salary account. I know that Mrs. Cameron feared to allow him to go alone across the ocean. He was really in a bad way; but she proposed to come back immediately on the Dunraven if he improved on the voyage across.
> Their means really did not allow of their taking the child; the steamship company would not hear of a half-fare for her. She is a nice little girl, and my wife would have been glad to keep her longer, but in the end she would have to go to you, as, I understand, there are no other relatives.
> Of course the flat is here, and the furniture. If you do not care to come on to attend to the matter yourself, I will do the best I can to dispose of either or both. Mr. Cameron had paid a year's rent in advance—rather an unwise thing, I thought—and the term has still ten months to run. He did it so that his wife, on her return from abroad, might have no worry on her mind. Perhaps the flat might be sublet, furnished, to advantage. You might state your pleasure regarding this.
> You will see, by the copy of your brother-in-law's will that I enclose, that you have been left in full and sole possession and guardianship of his property and affairs, including Carolyn May.

As if somebody had shipped him a crocodile from the Nile Joseph Stagg would have felt little more at a loss as to what disposal to make of the creature than he felt now regarding his little niece.

"Well—she'll be a nuisance; an awful nuisance," was his final comment, with a mountainous sigh.

Thus far, Aunty Rose Kennedy's attitude towards the little stranger had been the single pleasant disappointment Mr. Stagg had experienced. Aunty Rose was an autocrat. Joseph Stagg had never been so comfortable in his life as since Mrs. Kennedy had taken up the management of his home. But he stood in great awe of her.

He put the lawyer's letter in the safe. For once he was unable to respond to a written communication promptly. Although he wore that band of crepe on his arm he could not actually realize the fact that his sister Hannah was dead.

Any time these fifteen years he might have run down to New York to see her. First she had worked in the newspaper office as a stenographer. Then she had married John Lewis Cameron and they had gone immediately to housekeeping.

Cameron was a busy man; he held a "desk job" on the paper. Vacations had been hard to get. And before long Hannah had written about her baby—"Hannah's Car'lyn."

After the little one's arrival there seemed less chance than before for the city family to get up to Sunrise Cove. But at any time he might have gone to them. If Joseph Stagg had shut up his store for a week and gone to New York, it would not have brought the world to an end.

Nor was it because he was stingy that he had not done this. No, he was no miser. But he was fairly buried in his business. And there was no "look up" in that dim little office in the back of the hardware store.

On this evening he closed the store later than usual and set out for The Corners slowly. To tell the truth, Mr. Stagg rather shrank from arriving home. The strangeness of having a child in the house disturbed his tranquillity.

The kitchen only was lighted when he approached; therefore he was reassured. He knew Hannah's Car'lyn must have been put to bed long since.

It was dark under the trees and only long familiarity with the walk enabled him to reach the back porch noiselessly. Then it was that something scrambled up in the dark and the roar of a dog's barking made Joseph Stagg leap back in fright.

"Drat that mongrel!" he ejaculated, remembering Prince.

The kitchen door opened, revealing Aunty Rose's ample figure. Prince whined sheepishly and dropped his abbreviated tail, going to lie down again at the extreme end of his leash and blinking his eyes at Mr. Stagg.

"The critter's as savage as a bear!" grumbled the hardware merchant.

"He is a good watchdog; you must allow that, Joseph Stagg," Aunty Rose said calmly.

The hardware dealer gasped again. It would be hard to say which had startled him the most—the dog or Aunty Rose's manner.

CHAPTER IV.

Aunty Rose Unbends.

There never was a lovelier place for a little girl—to say nothing of a dog—to play in than the yard about the Stagg homestead; and this Carolyn May confided to Aunty Rose one forenoon after her arrival at The Corners.

Behind the house the yard sloped down to a broad, calmly flowing brook. Here the goose and duck pens were fenced off, for Aunty Rose would not allow the web-footed fowl to wander at large, as did the other poultry.

It was difficult for Prince to learn that none of those feathered folk were to be molested.

There was a wide-branching oak tree on a knoll overlooking the brook. Around its trunk Uncle Joe had built a seat. Carolyn May found this a grand place to sit and dream, while Prince lay at her feet.

When they saw Aunty Rose in her sunbonnet going toward the fenced-in garden they both jumped up and bounded down the slope after her. It was just here at the corner of the garden fence that Carolyn May had her first adventure.

Prince, of course, disturbed the serenity of the poultry. The hens went shrieking one way, the guinea fowl lifted up their voices in angry chatter, the turkey hens scurried to cover, but the turkey cock, General Bolivar, a big, white Holland fowl, was not to have his dignity disturbed and his courage impugned by any four-footed creature with waggish ears and the stump of a tail.

Carolyn's sunny disposition begins to have its effect upon Aunty Rose, with results that are amazing to Uncle Joe. You will enjoy the next installment.

PROUD RECORD OF RED CROSS

War Council Tells Chapters of Wonderful Work Done in the Past Year.

LARGE SUMS WELL EXPENDED

In the Eighteen Months Since This Country Entered the War the Immense Amount of $325,000,000 Has Been Accounted For.

Annual meetings of the 3,854 chapters of the Red Cross were held October 23. The War Council of the organization sent the following message, covering the work for the past year:

To the Chapters of the American Red Cross:

The War Council sends greetings to the chapters of the American Red Cross on the occasion of their annual meetings for 1918.

With these greetings go congratulations on the great work of the chapters during the past year and, above all things, on the wonderful spirit of sacrifice and patriotism which has pervaded that work.

The strength of the Red Cross rests upon its chapters. They are its bone and sinew. They supply its funds, they supply its men and women, they supply its enthusiasm. Let us, then, review together the Red Cross story of the past year.

Some idea of the size to which your Red Cross family has grown may be gathered from the following facts:

On May 1, 1917, just before the appointment of the War Council, the American Red Cross had 486,194 members working through 562 chapters.

On July 31, 1918, the organization numbered 20,648,103 annual members, besides 8,000,000 members of the Junior Red Cross—a total enrollment of over one-fourth the population of the United States.

Since the beginning of the war you of the chapters have co-operated with the War Council in conducting two war fund drives and one membership drive, in addition to the campaign on behalf of the Junior Red Cross.

The total actual collections to date from the first war fund have amounted to more than $115,000,000. The subscriptions to the second war fund amounted to upwards of $176,000,000.

From membership dues the collections have amounted to approximately $24,500,000.

Splendid Work Done by Women.

To the foregoing must be added that very large contribution of materials and time given by the millions of women throughout the country in surgical dressings, in knitted articles, in hospital and refugee garments, in canteen work, and the other activities the chapters have been called upon to perform.

It is estimated that approximately 8,000,000 women are engaged in canteen work and the production of relief supplies through the chapters.

For the period up to July 1, 1918, American Red Cross chapters, through their workrooms, had produced:

490,120	refugee garments.
7,123,621	hospital supplies.
10,786,489	hospital garments.
10,134,501	knitted articles.
192,748,107	surgical dressings.

A total of 221,282,838 articles—of an estimated aggregate value of at least $44,000,000.

These articles were largely the product of women's hands, and, by the same token, infinitely more precious than could have been the output of factories or machines. These articles going to the operating room of the hospitals, to homeless or needy refugees, and carrying comfort to our own boys in the field, convey a message of love from the women of this country entirely distinct from the great money value attaching to their handiwork.

Money Spent in Work.

By the terms under which the first Red Cross war fund was raised, the chapters were entitled to retain 25 per cent of the amount collected, in order defray local expenses, to carry on their home service work, to purchase materials to be utilized in chapter production and otherwise to meet the numerous calls made upon them. The chapters were thus entitled to retain nearly $30,000,000. As a matter of fact, their actual retentions amounted to only about $22,000,000.

Out of collections from annual memberships, the chapters have retained about $11,000,000.

From this total sum, therefore, of $33,000,000 retained by the chapters, they have met all the oftentimes very heavy local demands upon them, and in addition have provided for use by national headquarters products valued, as stated above, at upwards of $44,000,000.

The chapters have in effect returned to the War Council, not alone the $33,000,000 retained out of the war fund membership dues, but in value of national product, an additional contribution of at least $11,000,000.

It will thus been seen that during the eighteen months which have elapsed since the United States entered the war, the American people will have either paid in or pledged to the American Red Cross for its work of relief throughout the world, in money or in material values, a net total of at least $325,000,000.

Revealed America's Heart.

It has been because of this spirit which has pervaded all American Red Cross effort in this war that the aged governor of one of the stricken and battered provinces of France stated not long since that, though France had long known of America's greatness, strength and enterprise, it remained for the American Red Cross in this war to reveal America's heart.

In this country, at this moment, the workers of the Red Cross, through its chapters, are helping to add to the comfort and health of the millions of our soldiers in 102 camps and cantonments, as well as of those traveling on railroad trains or embarking on ships for duty overseas.

The home service of the Red Cross, with its now more than 40,000 workers, is extending its ministrations of sympathy and counsel each month to upwards of 100,000 families left behind by soldiers at the front—a number ever growing with the increase of our men under arms.

But, of course, the heart of the Red Cross and its money and attention always move toward and focus themselves in Europe where the American Red Cross, as truly "the greatest mother in the world," is seeking to draw "a vast net of mercy through an ocean of unspeakable pain."

Red Cross Worth Recognized.

Nothing is withheld that can be given over there to supplement the efforts of our army and navy in caring for our own boys. The Red Cross does not pretend to do the work of the medical corps of the army or the navy; its purpose is to help and to supplement.

Nor does the Red Cross seek to glorify what it does or those who do it; our satisfaction is in the result, which, we are assured by Secretary Baker, General Pershing, General Ireland and all our leaders, is of inestimable value and of indispensable importance.

By the first of January your Red Cross will have working in France upwards of 5,000 Americans—a vivid contrast to the little group of eighteen men and women which, as the first Red Cross commission to France, sailed about June 1, 1917, to initiate our efforts in Europe.

Your Red Cross now has active, operating commissions in France, in England, in Italy, in Belgium, in Switzerland, in Palestine and in Greece. You have sent a shipload of relief supplies and a group of devoted workers to northern Russia; you have dispatched a commission to work behind our armies in eastern Siberia; you have sent special representatives to Denmark, to Serbia and to the island of Madeira.

Carries Message of Hope.

Your Red Cross is thus extending relief to the armies and navies of our allies; and you are carrying a practical message of hope and relief to the friendly peoples of afflicted Europe and Asia.

Indeed, we are told by those best informed in the countries of our allies that the efforts of your Red Cross to aid the soldiers and to sustain the morale of the civilian populations left at home, especially in France and Italy, have constituted a very real factor in winning the war.

The veil has already begun to lift.

What the Red Cross may be called upon to do in the further course of the war, or with the coming of victory, peace and reconstruction, it would be idle to attempt to prophesy.

But your great organization, in very truth "the mobilized heart and spirit of the whole American people," has shown itself equal to any call, ready to respond to any emergency.

Spirit of All Best and Highest.

The American Red Cross has become not so much an organization as a great movement, seeking to embody in organized form the spirit of service, the spirit of sacrifice—in short, all that is best and highest in the ideals and aspirations of our country.

Indeed we cannot but believe that this wonderful spirit which service in and for the Red Cross has evoked in this war, is destined to become in our national life an element of permanent value.

At Christmas time we shall ask the whole American people to answer the Red Cross Christmas roll call. It will constitute a unique appeal to every man, woman and child in this great land of ours to become enrolled in our army of mercy.

It is the hope of the War Council that this Christmas membership roll call shall constitute a reconsecration of the whole American people, an inspiring reassertion to mankind that in this hour of world tragedy, not to conquer but to serve is America's supreme aim.

THE WAR COUNCIL OF THE AMERICAN RED CROSS.
Henry P. Davison, Chairman.
Washington, D. C., Oct. 10, 1918.

"GOOD FRIEND IN AMERICA"

Warm Tribute From Italian Soldier Whose Wife the Red Cross Organization Had Befriended.

His wife had been very ill, and was sent by the American Red Cross to recuperate in one of its country summer homes, unknown to "Gigi," who was doing his country's work in the trenches. This is the way he expresses himself when he learns what has been done:

"Most illustrious officers of the Red Cross:

"I feel that it is my duty to tell you how thankful I feel for your kindness to my wife. When I got a letter from her, in her own handwriting, telling me how your good people had picked her up and carried her off to a most comfortable house in the mountains, where she is feeling better every day, well—I just cried tears of joy, and am not a bit ashamed of them! We Italians have a good friend in America."

PHYSICIANS ARE CALLED TOO SOON

Not Necessary to Summon Doctor in Mild Cases of Spanish Influenza.

REST IN BED IS IMPORTANT

Acute Shortage of Medical and Nursing Service Makes It Imperative That People Learn Something of Care of Sick.

Washington.—In an effort to reduce unnecessary calls on the over-worked physicians throughout the country because of the present epidemic of influenza, Surgeon General Blue of the United States public health service calls upon the people of the country to learn something about the home care of patients ill with influenza. Physicians everywhere have complained about the large number of unnecessary calls they have had to make because of the inability of many people to distinguish between the cases requiring expert medical care and those which could readily be cared for without a physician. With influenza continuing to spread in many parts of the country, and with an acute shortage of doctors and nurses everywhere, every unnecessary call on either physicians or nurses makes it so much harder to meet the urgent needs of the patients who are seriously ill.

Present Generation Spoiled.

"The present generation," said the surgeon general, "has been spoiled by having had expert medical and nursing care readily available. It was not so in the days of our grandmothers, when every good housewife was expected to know a good deal about the care of the sick.

"Every person who feels sick and appears to be developing an attack of influenza should at once be put to bed in a well-ventilated room. If his bowels have moved regularly, it is not necessary to give a physic; where a physic is needed, a dose of castor oil or Rochelle salts should be given.

"The room should be cleared of all unnecessary furniture, bric-a-brac, and rugs. A wash basin, pitcher, and slop bowl, soap and towel should be at hand, preferably in the room or just outside the door.

"If the patient is feverish a doctor should be called, and this should be done in any case if the patient appears very sick, or coughs up pinkish (blood-stained) sputum, or breathes rapidly and painfully.

"Most of the patients cough up considerable mucus; in some, there is much mucus discharged from the nose and throat. This material should not be collected in handkerchiefs, but rather in bits of old rags, or toilet paper, or on paper napkins. As soon as used, these rags or papers should be placed in a paper bag kept beside the bed. Pocket handkerchiefs are out of place in the sick room and should not be used by patients. The rags or papers in the paper bag should be burned.

"The patients will not be hungry, and the diet should therefore be light. Milk, a soft-boiled egg, some toast or crackers, a bit of jelly or jam, stewed fruit, some cooked cereal like oatmeal, hominy or rice—these will suffice in most cases.

Comfort of Patient.

"The comfort of the patient depends on a number of little things, and these should not be overlooked. Among these may be mentioned a well-ventilated room; a thoroughly clean bed with fresh, smooth sheets and pillowcases; quiet, so that refreshing sleep may be had; cool drinking water conveniently placed; a cool compress to the forehead if there is headache; keeping the patient's hands and face clean, and the hair combed; keeping his mouth clean, preferably with some pleasant mouth wash; letting the patient know that someone is within call, but not annoying him with too much fussing; giving the patient plenty of opportunity to rest and sleep.

"So much for the patient. It is equally important to consider the person who is caring for him. It is important to remember that the disease is spread by breathing germ-laden matter sprayed into the air by the patient in coughing or even in ordinary breathing. The attendant should therefore wear a gauze mask over her mouth and nose while she is in the sick room.

Observe Cleanliness.

"The attendant should, if possible, wear a washable gown or an apron which covers the dress. This will make it much simpler to avoid infection.

"It is desirable that all attendants learn how to use a fever thermometer. This is not at all a difficult matter, and the use of such a thermometer is a great help in caring for the patients.

"In closing, and lest I be misunderstood, I wish to leave one word of caution: If in doubt, call the doctor."

Fact.

"We've had to come 17,000 miles to get in this fight," remarked an Australian in France.

"We haven't had to come that far," replied an American, "but it's just as hard to swim the Atlantic as it is the Pacific."

Taking Chances.

"Have they found out yet what is the matter with your son, Mike?"

"No, sir, as they've took him to the orspital to have a autopsy performed on him."

Would You Marry This Man?

He had struggled from earliest youth to keep his mother and himself in comfort. He had no time to acquire an education, but through inventions had accumulated a fortune. Then he met Kate Bates, who had run away from the farm to teach school. He courted her—she loved him. On Sunday he would ask her, but in the meantime he wrote a letter that showed clearly his lack of education.

What did Kate do? What would you have done?

NEWVILLE

Mrs. Gillingham remains seriously ill

Mrs. Mitchell, whose illness has been noted, is convalescent.

Ivan Richmond, of Peoria, Ill., is here for a few days, the guest of his mother.

Mrs. Dellie Lyons, of Hesperia, Mich., has returned to her mother's bedside, after spending about ten days at home.

Parents here who have boys in France have not received any mail from there for more than a month, and the last letters were more than twenty days on the way.

Omo Richmond and Romeo Fusselman returned home Friday, after spending about two weeks at Peoria, Ill. They report the influenza prevalent there and numerous deaths from the disease.

Frank Griest, of Hicksville, came to Newville on Thursday and took his parents, David Griest and wife, to Auburn in his new auto, which he was lucky enough to win at the Hicksville fair.

An item in the papers says that a certain per cent. of sugar will be allowed for the making of soft drinks. There's plenty of water. Better let the women have the sugar to bake a few pies.

Chub Richmond is in a serious condition with asthma.

Mrs. Gambling, of Ashley, will spend the coming winter with her daughter, Mrs. Al. Gengnagel.

Fred Thomas and wife, of Milford, Ind., were guests of their daughters, Mesdames Omar Casebeer and George Strong, and called on old-time Newville friends last week.

Miss Dorothy Warner and brother, Roy, were guests of their grandmother, Mrs. Sarah King, and family, of Auburn, Friday. Miss Ruth King on Saturday accompanied them to Newville for an over-Sunday visit.

Manford Smith on Wednesday came over from Hicksville and Mesdames Julie Wyatt and Lizzie Smith accompanied him home; and Thursday both families motored to Fort Wayne and spent the day with Miss Blanche Wyatt.

AMONG OUR SICK

John George and family have been under the doctor's care for a week, afflicted with influenza. Mrs. George and Dorothy and Arthur have been bedfast part of the time. Mr. George has managed, with difficulty, to attend to his work, with the exception of one day, when he was compelled to lay off.

EDITORIAL COMMENT OF REPUBLICAN NEWSPAPERS IN 1898.

Some people should refresh their memories and resurrect their patriotism at this time of the country's greatest peril.

PATRIOTISM PARTY ASSET

Indianapolis News, Oct. 22, 1898, Col. 7.—"No attempt is made to conceal the fact that the Republican managers hope to profit by the visit of the president to Indiana. While the receptions all along the route were non-partisan in character, the Republican state central committee saw to it that every effort was put forth to turn the meetings to Republican advantage. By pre-arrangement, Republican spell binders addressed every gathering, except the one in this city, after the president's train had departed. All of the arrangements for the president's trip in the state and for the stops were made by Republican managers. Yesterday afternoon, after the president had left the city, the executive committee of the party met here and summed up the results. It was agreed that great benefit to the Republicans must come of the visit of the president. The crowds at every place were even larger than the managers of the trip had expected, and supporters of the administration were very much pleased with the unanimity of sentiment displayed everywhere. The campaign cry of the Republicans from now until election day is to be: 'Stand by the president.'"

REPUBLICAN EDITORIAL

Indianapolis Journal, Oct. 26, 1918, Page 4.—"In this situation, there is but one course for patriotic Americans to pursue. They must stand by Bresident McKinley and hold up his hands by electing members of congress who will support and defend his war policy and its logical sequences. That Spanish war was not McKinley's war; it was the peopls's war. The president avoided war as long as he could honorably; but when the people demanded that he lead them, he put himself at the head of the nation and led it to glorious victory. The Spaniards, aided by the French press and the Spanish-American press in the United States, are trying to rob us of part of the fruits of victory, and are hoping to be strengthened in their position by a Democratic victory in November. There is but one course for patriotic Americans to pursue, and that is to stand by the president and make the next congress as strongly Republican as the pesent one is."

REPUELICAN EDITORIAL

Indianapolis News, Oct. 20, 1898—"'It is not wise to swap horses when you are crossing the stream,' was one of the wise sayings of Abraham Lincoln Is not that applicable in the present state of national politics? We are in the midst of problems growing out of the war. It is true, to be sure, that in the war there was no partisanship; that congress to a man supported the administratiou on the main question. But in the questions now to come up politics will play a great part. It is better for all concerned that the president should be supported by a congress in which his own party is in the majority. Besides all that, the return of a Democratic majority wonld surely be interpreted abroad as a condemnation of the administration."

REPUBLICAN EDITORIAL.

(Topeka (Kan.) Daily Capital, Nov. 3, 1898.)—The republican party puts it to the good sense of a Congress in sympathy with a President who has shown himself equal to every test would be for the best interests of the country at this time. * * * In such a campaign no-American worthy of the franchise should neglect his privilege to vote, and every man who believes in stalwart aggressive Americanism should hold up the hands of the stalwart American in the White House, and see that his friends and neighbors do the same."

REPUBLICAN EDITORIAL.

(Chicago Tribune, Nov. 8, 1898.)—"Whatever voters elsewhere may do, those in Chicago should show their appreciation of all the President has done and will do, if not hindered, by re-electing the seven Republican Congressmen. They will support the president's policy"

A Word About County Finances;

The last bonds of DeKalb County, issued for the construction of the county infirmary, were retired in 1912. Since that time the county has built a $300,000 court house, purchased the lot and built a power house costing $34,000, built the Newville bridge at a cost of $15,000, and has accumulated $55,000 to apply on the county jail, now under construction, besides keeping up the usual and ordinary expenses of the county, all of which has been done and paid for except an indebtedness of $40,000 on the court house. All this has been done without any increase in the county tax levy, the levy remaining lhe same at 49c. on the $100 valuation on taxable property since 1913.

Hearing Postponed to Friday

The hearing of the public service commission relative to the train service on the B. & O. at St. Joe, which was to be held at Garrett on last Tuesday, has been postponed until Friday of this week, at 1 p. m. This is a matter of the utmost importance to our town, and there should be a good attendance of representative citizens.

Time of hearing—Friday, Nov. 1, at 1 p. m; place—town hall, Garrett.

Setting Up Smokes

The boys about town have been treated to cigars a couple of times the past week. Asa Shuff, of Leesburg, Indiana, was married last June to Mrs. Josephine Coburn and they are now keeping house at the above named place, where Asa has work. Ralph Brown was also passing the smokes but we cannot give any further information.

To Whom It May Concern

Election time is here again, and every citizen should be interested in securing good men for all official positions.

I wish to speak especially of one not known as he should be, because of his quiet life and attention to home duties and demands. H. C. Hathaway was born in DeKalb county, and has spent his entire life in the community where he was born. He has served the town of St. Joe as councilman and the township of Concord as trustee. His official record, as well as his every-day life, has been clean and without a spot to mar it. He has the courage to do his duty even when opposition stares him in the face. From this fact comes some opposition, but what is a man worth who has no opposition?

A vote for Hathaway can not go amiss if you desire the office of county recorder filled in an efficient and competent man. By a

FROM The BOYS in SERVICE

FRANCE, Sept. 22, 1918.
DEAR MOTHER AND ALL:—

No letters from you this week. I do not receive mail from you very regularly. I received two letters from Agnes this week and none from you. I have had but one from you since arriving here.

How are you all? I am feeling fine and enjoying my school work. I have been promoted to "A" class. I made good grades last week, my lowest being 4, and 5 is the highest. So I think I did well. I will only be here about one week yet, judging from the grades I have received. I will be sent back about next Saturday. I like it here very much. It is a large school, and there is a fine Y. M. C. A.; and the latter is something we haven't very near our battery. They have entertainments every night.

I went up town today and visited an old cathedral that was built in 1236. It certainly is a magnificent structure, and gives an idea of medieval architecture. Before the French Revolution, it had a chime of fifteen bells in the tower; but now it has only nine, the largest weighing 16,000 pounds. They all ring at the same time; and, being in tune, they are very melodious and can be heard for a great distance. I also visited an old castle that was begun in 500, added to in 700 and 900, and completed in the Fifteenth ceneury. It is certainly worth visiting.

I am getting fat, and never felt better in all my life than I have since I entered the army. It is a great life to build up the body. I get plenty to eat, and just the kind that makes one grow.

We had a speech by a man from the United States yesterday. He was sent here by the secretary of war to talk to us. He is from Chicago, and is at the head of Sears, Roebuck & Co. His remarks were very interesting, his subject being the spirit of America concerning the bogs in the service.

Your loving son,
PVT. VERNE R. MONROE.
Batt. A, 70th Art., C. A. C.,

SPRINGFIELD, Ohio, Oct. 18.
DEAR FATHER AND MOTHER:—

I received my package of clean clothes, and I sent the bedspread back, for I have no use for it. I have five army blankets and one quilt, and I guess that is enough; but I was glad to get the pillow, for I had been using a blanket for that purpose.

I just got back from a football game between the First-Fourth and Second-Third platoons. The former won.

Will you send me a small can of that cane molasses? I would like to have some to put on my bread, for we do not have any butter.

This forenoon, our company went to Mrs. Hewitt's funeral. She was a Springfield Red Cross nurse. When we boys were sick with influenza, she came up to the hospital and took care of us, and she was a very fine old lady. Our company took up a collection and bought her some flowers. She was thought of very much by our company, and more so by the boys who were in the hospital.

I am going up town tonight and see what the town looks like. I don't suppose I will get home until Thanksgiving, because it wouldn't pay one to come home over Saturday and Sunday, for I can't get off on Saturday till noon. I got to stay here till inspection is over.

I am feeling good, only a little headache, but that will be over soon.

I took out $10,000 worth of insurance and had it signed over to mother, in case anything happened to me, and it costs me $6.40 a month.

Your son,
MERRITT MILLIMAN.

Common Sense-Use In Voting.

Smith:—Mr. Jones, I understand you are going to build a new barn.

Jones:—Yes, sir.

Smith:—Well, I would like to do the work.

Jones:—Are you competent—can you do the work?

Smith (handing Jones a bundle of papers):—Here are recommendations from men I have worked for.

Jones (looking over the papers):—Those are fine recommendations, Mr. Smith. I have no doubt you can do the work. But, your name isn't White.

Smith:—What has my name to do with my work?

Jones:—Well, when I was a little shaver, my grand-dad built a barn; and he had a carpenter to do the work by the name of White. I want a man by the same name to do my work. No use talking: you can't have the job of building my bar because your name isn't White.

Reader, what do you think of Jones? You say he is a fool, and the NEWS agrees with you. Could anything be more absurd than the position taken by him—would not let any man but one named White do his work because his grand-dad had once employed a man by that name on a similar job.

Now, Mr. Republican, Frank Baltz does not bear the same political name as did the man your grand-dad voted for; and if you vote against Frank simply because he does not belong to the same party that your grand-dad did, aren't you in the same class as Jones? He would not hire a man to build a barn because his name was not White. Will you refuse to help hire a man for sheriff because his name isn't Republican?

Mr. Democrat, are you, too, in the Jones class? If you refuse to vote for a good man because he does not belong to your grand-dan's party, you have no excuse for condemning Jones. H. C. Hathaway is asking for the job of being recorder. He does not bear the same political name as the man your grand-dad wanted, it is true. But, are you going to turn him down on that account?

We are going on the supposition, Mr. Republican and Mr. Democrat, that each of you votes the same ticket that your grand-dad did; and the chances are 20 to 1 that you do.

Gentlemen, when you employ a man, you hire one that is fitted for the work you want done, irrespective of his name, politics or religion. Now, why not apply the same sensible rule to voting? You can not get honesty and efficient men in office without voting for honest, efficient men; and the man who votes for the candidate of his own party when there is a better man on the opposition ticket is a poor citizen. Likewise, when an honest, efficient man is seeking re-election, all good citizens should vote for him. Reward the official that is faithful. Let him understand that duty performed, not his politics, is the test for re-election. That is the only way to elevate the public service.

Two Concord township men are candidates for county office this fall—Frank Baltz for sheriff and H. C. Hathaway for recorder. Can any citizen of eastern DeKalb county give a valid reason why both of them should not be elected.

Mr. Republican, has Frank Baltz made a good sheriff? You know he has—you can not deny it. Then your duty is plain—apply the same common sense to your voting that you do to business. If you have an employe that gives satisfaction, would you turn him down for an untried man, because the latter was recommended to you as being "just as good?" Certainly not. Then why turn down Frank Baltz for a man whose only claim for your support is the recommendation of a political party that he is "just as good."

J. L. F. BALTZ, Sheriff.

Mr. Democrat, you have known H. C. Hathaway all your life. You have known him as a citizen and as an official. You know he has proven his worth in each place. You are interested in having good men in office. Here is your opportunity to compliment a neighbor and vote for a good man at the same time.

Rise above party—vote for the men!

NATIONS CANNOT TRUST WORD OF GERMAN MASTERS

President Wilson, Tells the Kaiser He Must Surrender to the Allies.

DECLARES HE WILL NOT DEAL WITH AUTOCRATS

Notifies Berlin Nothing Can Be Gained by Leaving This Essential Fact Unsaid—Chiefs of Allied Armies Must Dictate Any Armistice—More Than 2,000,000 Yanks Now in France, and Going Over Fast.

Washington, Oct. 24.—"The nations of the world do not and cannot trust the word of those who have hitherto been the masters of German policy."

This is the answer of the president of the United States to Germany's latest bid for peace, while notifying her that on her acceptance of his terms, the question of an armistice, which Germany seeks, is to be presented to the governments of the nations associated with the United States.

The president goes on to say without equivocation "that if it (the United States) must deal with the military masters and the monarchial autocrats of Germany now, or if it is likely to have to deal with them later in regard to the international obligations of the German empire, it must demand not peace negotiations but surrender."

The president says that nothing can be gained by leaving this essential thing unsaid.

Huns Must Disarm.

The president's reply, which was made public at nine o'clock Wednesday night, serves notice on Germany that on her solemn assurance of acceptance of the terms laid down by him in his recent addresses, he cannot decline to take up with the governments associated with the United States in the war the question of an armistice.

However, he forcefully serves notice on Germany that only an armistice which will amount to the practical disarming of her forces in the field will be considered at all.

Points Way to Peace.

The president's message clearly points the way for Germany to obtain peace and at the same time it strips the German note of every vestige of hypocrisy that camouflaged it. The president reiterates that there can be no peace with autocracy save the peace that comes on the heels of unconditional surrender. That point is made perfectly plain.

Furthermore, the president does, as he said he would, refers the question of an armistice to the military advisers of those governments associated with the United States in the war. Their word will be final on that subject, and his very words strengthen the word they will give if the question goes that far.

The distrust that every one felt at the German note is expressed openly by the president, so openly, in fact, that there can no longer be any question in the minds of the American people as to how the president looks upon the peace reforms which the German government so glibly said it had accomplished.

More Than 2,000,000 Yanks Over There

He says that "it may be" that future wars have been brought under the control of the German people, but he adds that the present war—the one with which the entire world is concerned—has not, and he adds that it is evident that the German people today are without the power of commanding acquiescence of the military authorities.

In addition to the reply of the president, there was made public by Joseph P. Tumulty, the president's secretary, a letter from the president to Secretary of War Baker, congratulating both the war and navy departments on the successful transportation of more than 2,000,000 soldiers overseas.

Text of Reply.

President Wilson's reply to the latest German note follows:

"Department of State, Oct. 23.

"Sir—I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 22d, transmitting a communication under date of the 20th from the German government, and to advise you that the president has instructed me to reply thereto as follows:

"Having received the solemn and explicit assurance of the German government that it unreservedly accepts the terms of peace laid down in his address to the congress of the United States on the 8th of January, 1918, and the principles of settlement enunciated in his subsequent addresses, particularly the address of the 27th of September, and that it desires to discuss the details of their application, and that this wish and purpose emanate not from those who have hitherto dictated the policy and conducted the present war on Germany's behalf, but from ministers who speak for the majority of the reichstag and for an overwhelming majority of the German people, and having received also the explicit promise of the present German government that the humane rules of civilized warfare will be observed both on land and sea by the German armed forces, the president of the United States feels that he cannot decline to take up with the governments with which the government of the United States is associated the question of an armistice.

"He deems it his duty to say again, however, that the only armistice he would feel justified in submitting for consideration would be one which should leave the United States and the powers associated with her in a position to enforce any arrangements that may be entered into and to make a renewal of hostilities on the part of Germany impossible.

Must Protect Allies.

"The president has, therefore, transmitted his correspondence with the present German authorities to the governments with which the government of the United States is associated as a belligerent, with the suggestion that if those governments are disposed to effect peace upon the terms and principles indicated their military advisers and the military advisers of the United States be asked to submit to the governments associated against Germany the necessary terms of such an armistice as will fully protect the interests of the peoples involved and insure to the associated governments the unrestricted power to safeguard and enforce the details of the peace to which the German government has agreed, provided they deem such an armistice possible from the military point of view.

"Should such terms of armistice be suggested, their acceptance by Germany will afford the best concrete evidence of her unequivocal acceptance of the terms and principles of peace from which the whole action proceeds.

"The president would deem himself lacking in candor did he not point out in the frankest possible terms the reason why extraordinary safeguards must be demanded.

"Significant and important as the constitutional changes seem to be which are spoken of by the German foreign secretary in his note of the 20th of October, it does not appear that the principle of a government responsible to the German people has yet been fully worked out, or that any guarantees either exist or are in contemplation that the alterations of principle and of practice now partially agreed upon will be permanent.

"Moreover, it does not appear that the heart of the present difficulty has been reached.

German People Without Voice.

"It may be that future wars have been brought under the control of the German people, but the present war has not been, and it is with the present war that we are dealing.

"It is evident that the German people have no means of commanding the acquiescence of the military authorities of the empire in the popular will; that the power of the king of Prussia to control the policy of the empire is unimpaired; that the determining initiative still remains with those who have hitherto been the masters of Germany.

"Feeling that the whole peace of the world depends now on plain speaking and straightforward action, the president deems it his duty to say, without any attempt to soften what may seem harsh words, that the nations of the world do not and cannot trust the word of those who have hitherto been the masters of German policy, and to point out once more that in concluding peace and attempting to undo the infinite injuries and injustices of this war the government of the United States cannot deal with any but veritable representatives of the German people who have been assured of a genuine constitutional standing as the real rulers of Germany.

"If it must deal with the military masters and the monarchial autocrats of Germany, or if it is likely to have to deal with them later in regard to the international obligations of the German empire, it must debate not peace negotiations, but surrender.

"Nothing can be gained by leaving this essential thing unsaid.

"Accept, sir, the renewed assurances of my high consideration.

(Signed) "ROBERT LANSING.

"Mr. Frederick Oederlin, Chargé d'Affaires of Switzerland, ad interim, in charge of German Interests in the United States."

Must Disarm the Hun.

London, Oct. 24.—Gen. Sir A. Hunter said: "We must compel the surrender of the kaiser as the Germans compelled the surrender of the emperor of France at the end of the Franco-Prussian war. The armistice is a matter for Marshal Foch and Admiral Beatty to decide. The Germans must be beaten to their knees."

Austin, Tex., Oct. 24.—The court of criminal appeals in a majority opinion held the state-wide prohibition law unconstitutional. The opinion holds that this law is in conflict with the local option feature of the constitution of the state.

STATE NEWS

Columbus.—The program for the annual apple show of the Indiana Horticultural society here, November 6, 7 and 8, has been announced. The welcome address will be made by William G. Irwin, president of the Columbus chamber of commerce, to which response will be made by F. J. Heacock of Salem, president of the horticultural society. The program includes the following subjects for discussion: "Wartime Orcharding," R. B. Cruickshank; "Cherry Growing From a Woman's Standpoint," Mrs. Edith Jones; "Pruning—Its Effect on Production," W. H. Chandler; "Winter Injury of Fruit Trees," W. H. Chandler; "Apple Blotch Control," W. S. Brock; "Is Thinning Fruit Profitable?" W. H. Alderman; "Pollination," W. H. Chandler; "Orchard Fertilization," R. B. Cruickshank, and "Fruit Growing in West Virginia," W. H. Chandler.

Indianapolis.—The state board of health voted to extend the ban on public gatherings until midnight, November 2. The influenza and pneumonia situation in Indiana was declared to be serious and orders of the health board that car windows be open and that no public meetings be held were declared necessary. This will be the third week Indiana has been in a state of quasi-quarantine because of influenza. Fifty-four counties reported 1,565 new cases of influenza to the state board. This is 376 fewer cases than were reported the day previous. The board has accurate knowledge of 584 deaths up to date from the influenza-pneumonia epidemic, and of 40,753 cases. It is estimated that the actual number of deaths and cases is probably 50 per cent greater than the number reported to the board.

Indianapolis.—Ele Stansbury, attorney general of Indiana, filed two complaints in the Marion circuit court before Judge Louis B. Ewbank, to recover for the city of Indianapolis $22,500, of which $18,244.90 is alleged by the state board of accounts to have been taken fraudulently out of the Indianapolis treasury. The remainder of the $22,500 includes $4,000 interest on the sum, out of which the city is declared to have been defrauded. The state, on the relation of the city of Indianapolis, sues in one case for $14,000, which, it is alleged, represents fraudulent payments on checks made out to fictitious persons. It sues in the other case for $8,500 which, it is alleged, represents fraudulent payments to persons who are declared to have given the city no services for the money they received.

Indianapolis.—Indiana will yet receiver her full allotment of 285,000 tons of anthracite, despite the delay in obtaining the expected early shipments into the state, Evans Woollen, state fuel administrator, believes. Mr. Woollen, who spent a couple of days in the city conferring with assistants in the state fuel administration before returning to Washington for the final two weeks of his service as an assistant to H. A. Garfield, federal fuel administrator, says instalments of the anthracite supply will reach the state each month until the full allotment has arrived.

Lafayette.—Ten well-known farmers have started checking up the results of the five-acre corn-growing contest, the classic of the Indiana Corn Growers' association. Practically 1,000 men were entered in the contest at the start of the season, but 300 dropped out because of the frost June 22 or the drought in July and August. Gold medals will be given all those who produced more than 100 bushels to the acre; silver to those who grew 85 to 100 bushels, and bronze medals to the 75 to 85-bushel men.

South Bend.—Three representatives of the war department came to South Bend to award contracts for the erection of 187 homes for war workers, who are to be brought here to be placed in the shell factory being erected in connection with the Studebaker corporation. It is expected to increase the force of that plant by 5,000 men before the end of the year. The houses will be erected on land acquired a month ago by the government.

Rensselear—Thirty-two pure-bred Shorthorn calves belonging to the Jaiho County Shorthorn Calf club were sold for an average of $357 a head, or nearly $300 a head more than they cost at the time of distribution a year ago. The calf sale totaled $12,125. Thirty-two head sold by local breeders brought $6,525, an average of $205. Breeders were here from all over the central West.

Indianapolis.—The condition of Governor Goodrich continues to improve following his accident of more than a month ago. His broken left hip is mending nicely, he says, and otherwise he is "feeling fine." It is expected that within a few more weeks he will be able to be about considerably. He will be obliged to use crutches for a time.

Indianapolis.—A two-months' extension on life for chickens, ducks and other representatives of the poultry tribe has been asked by the United States food administration. Stanley Wyckoff, federal food administrator for Marion county, announced that all poultry dealers were to be requested to hold all poultry until after January 1 and market only 25 or 30 per cent of the amount they usually do. The poultry raisers have complied with the government's request to raise more poultry, and now that they have it, it is contended that it is to their advantage to hold it for two months.

Indianapolis.—An increase of 141 new influenza cases in Indiana was shown in reports reaching the state board of health from 57 counties. The total number reported was 1,941, while 54 counties reported 1,800 new cases. Three more counties are in the later report. The total number in the state reported since October 7 is now 39,188. Logansport appealed to the board for nurses. Conditions are reported particularly bad in the neighborhood of Terre Haute, Clinton, Princeton and Aurora. Some improvement is reported in the heretofore serious situations in Marshall, Laporte, Howard and White counties. White county has had 12 deaths out of 1,500 cases of the disease. The change in weather from warm and dry to damp is not believed at the state office to have much influence in the general situation.

Noblesville.—Men who are disloyal to the government in their utterances and who refused to purchase Liberty loan bonds will not be permitted to serve as appointees in the Hamilton circuit court, according to a resolution adopted by the local bar. The resolution, which was passed unanimously and approved by the court, says that no man who does not support the government in its war with Germany and who does not buy bonds shall be permitted to serve as a guardian, administrator, receiver or in any other court capacity. The resolution also provides for the discharge of guardians, administrators and receivers now serving under the jurisdiction of the court who have not bought bonds.

Indiana Harbor.—Conditions due to Spanish influenza have been greatly relieved by the local chapter of the Red Cross. Indiana Harbor, East Chicago, Gary and Hammond have a total population of 145,000, with only two hospitals, one at Gary and one at Hammond. Congested housing conditions at Indiana Harbor, with its big foreign population, gave the influenza full sway until the Red Cross came to the rescue. Without waiting for orders from headquarters the Red Cross directors rented a building, furnished it with beds, linen and other equipment and in a few hours had a hospital with four wards of 15 beds each in full operation.

Indianapolis.—Officials of the state Liberty loan committee have compiled no total of subscriptions in the 68 counties of the federal reserve district since banks throughout the state began rushing final reports through to the reserve banks. L. L. Campbell, office manager at Liberty loan headquarters, said there appeared little doubt but that the oversubscription of the 68 counties in the Seventh district will be between $8,000,000 and $9,000,000. The 24 counties of southern Indiana have reported an oversubscription of $803,200.

Indianapolis.—A report received from Washington by Mayor Joseph R. Eastman, medical aid to the governor, shows that Indiana ranks seventh in the percentage of rejections of drafted men at cantonments. "The states ahead of Indiana," says Mayor Eastman, "are very small or are sparsely settled, so that the showing is very gratifying and reflects fine credit on local and medical boards in the state. The only state ahead of us which is in our class is Texas."

Terre Haute.—The Indiana Bituminous Coal Operators' association issued a statement showing that for the week ended October 12 692,228 tons of coal were hoisted at mines in the state, an increase of 4,000 tons over the previous highest week. This increase was made despite a car shortage of more than 7 per cent. It is believed that the production at the mines in October will be by far the greatest ever known.

Indianapolis.—Nothing but unconditional surrender of Germany ought to be considered, the United Mine Workers of America said in a telegram to President Wilson in stating views on the latest note from Germany. The message was signed by William Green, secretary-treasurer of the organization. The miners also promised to increase the coal output, as requested by General Pershing.

Bloomington.—War cut down attendance at Indiana university for the year 1917-18, but is responsible for a sharp increase for the year just started. Special war courses have brought a large number of men of draft age here who otherwise would have awaited the call by draft boards. Already this year the enrollment shows a total of 1,234 men and 685 women.

Indianapolis.—The state council of defense authorized Chairman M. E. Foley to issue a proclamation calling employers' attention to the state law which grants employees a four-hour period, if necessary, to vote at the coming election.

Monticello.—The office of sheriff of White county has been made vacant a second time within the space of a few weeks, by the death of Hervey H. Brannon who died of pneumonia, following an attack of influenza.

Hammond.—Fifty deaths from influenza in three days in Hammond resulted in a call for 500 volunteer nurses being sent out by the local board of health.

Lafayette.—Announcement was made by C. R. George of Purdue university, secretary of the Indiana Dairy association, that Dr. J. N. Hurty, state health commissioner, had given permission for the holding of the southern Indiana dairy convention and show at Seymour, October 30, 31 and November 1. It is understood that the ban on public meetings will be lifted by that time. Mr. George also announced that the display of the United States department of agriculture, which was shown at the national dairy show at Columbus, O., will be at Seymour.

ACQUIRING A HABIT

By GERTRUDE ATHERTON

Of The Vigilantes

Probably nothing could humiliate us more than to be forced to admit any superior quality in a race for which we have a profound loathing and contempt. And yet it is a fact that the national habit of thrift in Germany is one secret of its prolonged resistance to the combined might of the civilized world. It is quite true that before the war the Germans were gross eaters, but they wasted nothing. The moment the civilians were ordered to eat less and save the scraps they drew in their belts and did as they were told. It might be difficult to control the cravings of their distended stomachs but to scrimp and save involved no long apprenticeship, cost them practically no effort whatever.

The same may be said of France. While England—as wasteful a nation as our own—was issuing repeated and almost frantic warnings to her people, devising constant new methods to control their natural extravagance, and at one time threatened with starvation, the French simply went on economizing and never were in danger for a moment.

I never shall forget my first visit to Paris. It was to friends, who lived in great style, but if I happened to feel hungry during the day or when I went to bed late, I either had to go hungry or satisfy my healthy young appetite at a confiserie. There is never an extra roll in a French household. Exact rations are bought every morning for the day. If there are children in the home, who must be fed between meals, that is provided for, but nothing whatever for eccentric appetites.

I rebelled vigorously and denounced the French as a mean, stingy, economical race, my opprobrium extending to the Americans who drifted supinely into the national habit.

Easy to Follow Hoover's Rules.

Little did I think in those days that the national habit of thrift and severe economy in France was one of their greatest sources of strength. The national debt of France before the war was subscribed to almost exclusively by the peasant class and lower bourgeoisie, people who periodically dug into their stockings and bought a new bond. Nothing can exceed the self-denial of those classes. It was for this reason that Le Bien-Etre du Blesse, which was formed at the request of the French government to provide delicacies for the wounded soldiers in the hospitals of the war zone, was a private organization, the funds to be raised by subscription. The men must have the tempting and delicate foods or die, but if the government had taken over the task itself, that would have meant another tax, to be followed immediately by a popular outcry. To the average French mind delicacy rhymes with luxury, and it would have been impossible to convince the millions drudging at home that wounded men needed what they never had had before, ill or well.

When I lived in Munich I had a Swiss maid in whom I had implicit (and justifiable) faith. She would come to me periodically and say, "Madame, je n'ai plus d'argent," and I would hand out several hundred marks. That was all I had to do with the housekeeping during my seven years' residence in Germany. And yet my incomparable Elsie would never give me anything to eat between meals but zwiebach, which in Germany is as hard as the thrice accursed national heart.

I have found it comparatively easy to follow most of the Hoover rules, for I have always eaten meat merely as a matter of duty, and took kindly to Graham biscuit with my morning tea. Moreover, the bread and butter habit at lunch and dinner I have always thought vulgar. But to eliminate waste has been a different matter. Still I have in a measure succeeded. There is nothing in the bread box or anywhere else (except the inevitable boxes of Graham biscuit) but the daily ration; so that now when I come home in the afternoon hungry I either forget it or eat a few more Graham biscuit—which I shall never look at again after the war is over.

Will Be Greatest Nation.

I mention this personal experience because it is no doubt that of many others. In a short time it will be the experience of everyone in the United States; for the way this nation has waked up, denied itself its customary luxuries in order to put the money into the Liberty loan and War Savings stamps is the most significant thing in its history. And as there is something very fascinating about thrift and economy after it has been practiced for a time no doubt the habit will be a lasting one, and this nation will reach heights of wealth and strength of character that its most ardent native admirer never would have ventured to predict. More than any other single cause does a national habit, if it is a good one, knit a nation together, prevent the disintegration which comes from the softness of over-indulgence.

And for the formation of this habit of thrift, and the lucid exposition of what thrift means in the winning of the war, we must thank the War Savings stamp campaign. I doubt if any individual in this country, barring the traitors who call themselves pacifists and I. W. W.'s, has failed to buy himself at least one War Savings stamp.

What Are We Going to Do About It?

By E. E. HARRIMAN

Of The Vigilantes

This war will end some day. Some folks are already planning what they will do after it is over. Are we?

I read the other day that the German and Austrian prisoners now in Russia had resolved, almost to a man, that they would not go back to their former homes when the war ended, but would emigrate to the United States and Canada. What will our twin countries say to them?

"Come right along, brother! Make yourself at home. Take this chair, It has a higher back and thicker cushion. Have a glass of ice-cold beer with me. I'll tell the wife and she will cook up a mess of sausages and make some biscuit and open her best canned fruit for you. Let me adjust this stool under your trench shoes and offer a cigar to while away the time till the dinner is ready."

Will we talk like that? Oh, will we?

If we do I shall start out on a hike into the frozen north and begin to live on whale steaks and seal blubber.

Isn't it about time for us to begin to plan? Should we go on with our job of licking the Hun and never look ahead to the time when he is going to become an economic question? Should we let things slide till he is on the sea, coming over in any old bottom that he can rake up, prepared to grab off a lot of New World coin and land and help us make our laws nice and easy for the Hun at home?

Or shall we tell the Hun in Europe to get inside the Hunnish lines and stay there, while he works out his own salvation? Shall we say to the Hun who, being in America and enjoying its advantages, has elected to go back to Hunland and join in the frightfulness that has been the backbone of Kaiser Bill's plan, that it was no more than should be expected and he is welcome to come home to us?

Start With Clean Slate.

Shall we open our internment camps and let them spew out upon our land the rotten messes they now hold? Having a clean dish and wholesome food, shall we defile it with propagandists and spies and enemy agents? Having made our bed with clean sheets and pillowslips and blankets, shall we turn the covers back and let the wallowing swine from the roadside mudhole creep within?

There is only one line of conduct that we can follow with honor and commonsense, and that is the line that will keep our bed and food and home clean. The line that will maintain the purity that we have attained through the refining by fire. We must say to the Hun in Europe, in America, in Asia, anywhere he may be found:

"Get to work within the confines of your own country! Build up and purify your land. Purge it of the filth that clogs its spirit. Wash it clean of the evil it has clung to so long. Refine it with years of sacrifice and earnest work for the right. Then, after the leaven has worked and passing decades have carried away the last grain of the old devilish doctrines and beliefs, then it is possible that the nations may grant you amnesty and let you go out through the world at large once more. It is up to you. Get to work on yourself."

Letting the Hun wander at will after this war is over will be like leaving the line of fuse burning and merely cutting off the dead end after the spark had crawled inward toward the magazine.

Allowing him to have the same old freedom to come to our shores would be as foolish, and as disastrous in the end, as it would be to smother a fire with cotton loosely piled.

No Room for Traitors.

President Wilson and his advisers have a great many matters to handle and many questions to decide. Let us not leave them to do all the thinking or all the talking on this question. The American people are concerned to such a degree in this matter that they should not delegate to any man or body of men the task of thinking for them. They should do their own thinking and when they have had time to formulate a plan that looks feasible and thoroughgoing, they should say to their servants at Washington, from the president down:

"Here! You put this through along the line we have laid down. It is no time for fooling or for doing party politics. Put up the bars and spike them fast so no one one can slip them. We have a stomachful and we must have time to digest it before we swallow any more."

Then get busy with the American of foreign birth and Americanize him or throw him over the bars to the soil that bore him. We have no room in America for the man who shouts "Hurrah for America!" and follows it with a whisper of "Gott sei dank, Ich bin Deutscher."

OUR BOYS

By MARY ELIZABETH RODHOUSE of the Vigilantes.

God make us worthy of our boys,
Fearless and true as they must be,
Clear-eyed to face reality,
And blithe withal and glad of heart.

Help us each one to do his part,
With faith serene and spirit high
As they who teach us how to die
God make us worthy of our boys.

Carolyn of the Corners

BY RUTH BELMORE ENDICOTT

Copyright, 1918, by Dodd, Mead & Company, Inc.

CAROLYN'S SUNNY DISPOSITION BEGINS TO HAVE ITS EFFECT UPON AUNTY ROSE.

Synopsis.—Her father and mother reported lost at sea when the Dunraven, on which they had sailed for Europe, was sunk, Carolyn May Cameron—Hannah's Carolyn—is sent from New York to her bachelor uncle, Joseph Stagg, at the Corners. The reception given her by her uncle is not very enthusiastic. Carolyn is also chilled by the stern demeanor of Aunty Rose, Uncle Joe's housekeeper. Stagg is dismayed when he learns from a lawyer friend of his brother-in-law that Carolyn has been left practically penniless and consigned to his care as guardian.

Therefore General Bolivar charged with outspread wings and quivering fan. His eyesight was not good, however. He charged the little girl instead of the roistering dog.

Carolyn May frankly screamed. Had the angry turkey reached the little girl he would have beaten her down and perhaps seriously injured her.

He missed her the first time, but turned to charge again. Prince barked loudly, circling around the bristling turkey cock, undecided just how to get into the battle. But Aunty Rose knew no fear of anything wearing feathers.

"Scat, you brute!" she cried, and made a grab for the turkey, gripping him with her left hand behind his head, bearing his long neck downward. In her other hand she seized a piece of lath and with it chastised the big turkey across the haunches with vigor.

"Oh, don't spank him any more, Aunty Rose!" gasped Carolyn May at last. "He must be sorry."

With a final stroke Aunty Rose allowed the big fowl to go—and he ran away fast enough.

"Your dog, child, does not know his manners. If he is going to stay here with you he must learn that fowl are not to be chased nor startled."

"Oh, Aunty Rose!" begged the little girl, "don't punish Prince! Not—not that way. Please don't! Why, he's never been spanked in his life! He wouldn't know what it meant. Dear Aunty Rose—"

"I shall not beat him, Car'lyn May," interrupted Aunty Rose. "But he must learn his lesson. He must learn that liberty is not license. Bring him here, Car'lyn May."

She led the way to an open coop of laths in the middle of the back yard. This was a hutch in which she put broody hens when she wished to break up their desire to set. She opened the gate of it and motioned Prince to enter.

The dog looked pleadingly at his little mistress' face, then into the woman's stern countenance. Seeing no reprieve in either, with drooping tail he slunk into the cage.

With one hand clutching her frock over her heart, Carolyn May's big blue eyes overflowed.

"It's just as if he was arrested," she said. "Poor Prince! Has he got to stay there always, Aunty Rose?"

"He'll stay till he learns his lesson," said Mrs. Kennedy grimly, and went on into the garden.

Carolyn May sat down close to the side of the cage, thrust one hand between the slats and held one of the dog's front paws. She had hoped to go into the garden to help Aunty Rose pick peas, but she could not bear to leave Prince alone.

By and by Mrs. Kennedy came up from the garden, her pan heaped with pods. She looked neither in the direction of the prisoner nor at his little mistress.

Prince whined and lay down. He had begun to realize now that this was no play at all, but punishment. He blinked his eyes at Carolyn May and looked as sorry as ever a dog with cropped ears and an abbreviated tail could look.

The peas and potatoes were cooking for dinner when Aunty Rose appeared again. There was the little girl, all of a dewy sleep, lying on the grass by the prison pen. Aunty Rose would have released Prince, but, though he wagged his stump of a tail at her and yawned and blinked, she had still her doubts regarding a mongrel's good nature.

She could not allow the child to sleep there, however; so, stooping, picked up Carolyn May and carried her comfortably into the house, laying her down on the sitting-room couch to have her nap out—as she supposed, without awakening her.

Aunty Rose came away softly and closed the door and while she finished getting dinner she tried to make no noise which would awaken the child.

Mr. Stagg came home at noon, quite as full of business as usual. To tell the truth, Mr. Stagg always felt bashful in Aunty Rose's presence; and he tried to hide his affliction by conversation. So he talked steadily through the meal.

But somewhere—about at the pie course, it was—he stopped and looked around curiously.

"Bless me!" he exclaimed, "where's Hannah's Car'lyn?"

"Taking a nap," said Aunty Rose composedly.

"Hum! can't the child get up to her victuals?" demanded Mr. Stagg. "You begin serving that young one separately and you'll make yourself work, Aunty Rose."

"Never trouble about that which doesn't concern you, Joseph Stagg," responded his housekeeper rather tartly. "The Lord has placed the care of Hannah's Car'lyn on you and me and I'll do my share and do it proper."

Mr. Stagg shook his head and lost interest in his wedge of berry pie. "There are institutions—" he began weakly; but Aunty Rose said quickly:

"Joseph Stagg! I know you for what you are—other people don't. If the neighbors heard you say that they'd think you were a heathen. Your own sister's child!"

"Now, you send Tim, the hackman, up after me this afternoon. I've got to go shopping. The child hasn't a thing to wear but that fancy little black frock, and she'll ruin that playing around. She's got to have frocks and shoes and another hat—all sorts of things. Seems a shame to dress a child like her in black—it's punishment. Makes her affliction double, I do say."

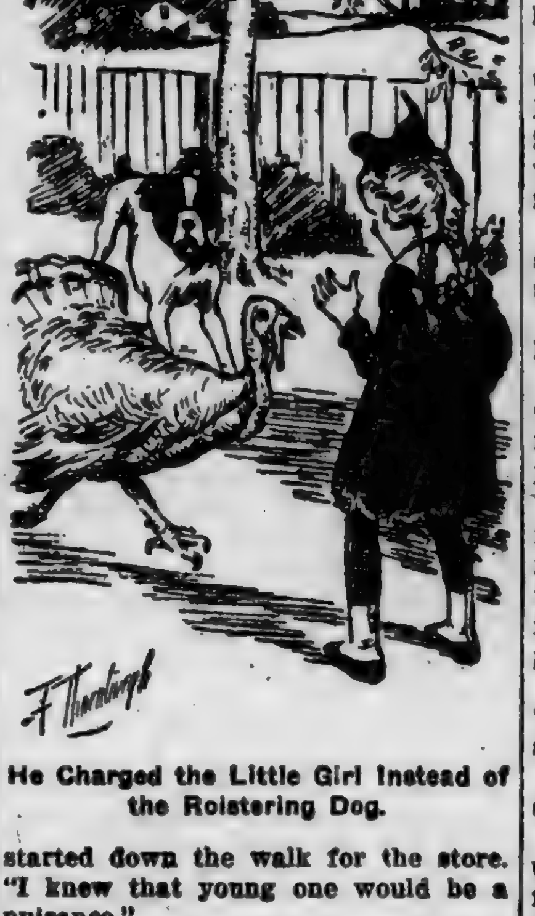
"Well, I suppose we've got to flatter Custom or Custom will weep," growled Mr. Stagg. "But where the money's coming from—"

"Didn't Car'lyn's pa leave her none?" asked Aunty Rose promptly.

"Well—not what you'd call a fortune," admitted Mr. Stagg slowly.

"Thanks be you've got plenty, then. And if you haven't I have," said the woman in a tone that quite closed the question of finances.

"Which shows me just where I get off at," muttered Joseph Stagg as he started down the walk for the store. "I knew that young one would be a nuisance."



He Charged the Little Girl Instead of the Roistering Dog.

Carolyn May, who was quite used to taking a nap on the days that she did not go to school, woke up, as bright as a newly minted dollar, very soon after her Uncle Joe left for the store.

"I'm awfully sorry I missed him," she confided to Aunty Rose when she danced into the kitchen. "You see, I want to get acquainted with Uncle Joe just as fast as possible. And he's at home so little I guess that it's going to be hard to do it."

"Oh, is that so? And is it going to be hard to get acquainted with me?" asked the housekeeper curiously.

"Oh, no!" cried Carolyn May, snuggling up to the good woman and patting her plump bare arm. "Why, I'm getting 'quainted with you fast, Aunty Rose! You heard me say my prayers and when you laid me down on the couch just now you kissed me."

Aunty Rose actually blushed. "There, there, child!" she exclaimed. "You're too noticing. Eat your dinner, that I've saved warm for you."

"Isn't Prince to have any dinner, Aunty Rose?" asked the little girl.

"You may let him out, if you wish, after you have had your dinner. You can feed him under the tree."

Carolyn May was very much excited about an hour later when a rusty closed hack drew up to the front gate of the Stagg place and stopped.

An old man with a square-cut chin whisker and clothing and hat as rusty as the hack itself held the reins over the bony back of the horse that drew the ancient equipage.

"I say, young'un, ain't you out o' yer bailiwick?" queried Tim, the hackman, staring at the little girl in the Stagg yard.

Carolyn May stood up quickly and tried to look over her shoulder and down her back. It was hard to get all those buttons buttoned straight.

"I don't know," she said, perturbed. "Does it show?"

"Huh?" grunted Tim. "Does what show?"

"What you said," said Carolyn May accusingly. "I don't believe it does."

"Hey!" chuckled the hack driver suddenly. "I meant, do you 'low Mrs. Kennedy knows you're playing in her front yard?"

"Aunty Rose? Why, of course!" Carolyn May declared. "Don't you know I live here?"

"Live here? Get out!" exclaimed the surprised hackman.

"Yes, sir. And Prince too. With my Uncle Joe and Aunty Rose."

"Pitcher of George Washington!" ejaculated Tim. "You don't mean Joe Stagg's taken a young-'un to board?"

"He's my guardian," said the little girl primly.

Aunty Rose appeared. She wore a close bonnet, trimmed very plainly and carried a parasol of drab silk.

Aunty Rose climbed into the creaky old vehicle.

"Are you going to be gone long?" asked Carolyn May politely.

"Not more than two hours, child," said the housekeeper. "Nobody will bother you here—"

"Not while that dog's with her, I reckon," put in Tim, the hackman.

"May I come down the road to meet you, Aunty Rose?" asked the little girl. "I know the way to Uncle Joe's store."

"I don't know any reason why you can't come to meet me," replied Mrs. Kennedy. "Anyway, you can come along the road as far as the first house. You know that one?"

"Yes, ma'am. Mr. Parlow's," said Carolyn May.

Carolyn May went back into the yard and sat on the front-porch steps and Prince, yawning unhappily, curled down at her feet. There did not seem to be much to do at this place.

She had time now, had Carolyn May to compare The Corners with the busy Harlem streets with which she had been familiar all her life.

"Goodness me!" thought Carolyn May, startled by her own imagination "suppose all the folks in all these houses around here were dead!"

They might have been for all the human noises she heard.

"Goodness me!" she said again, and this time she jumped up, startling Prince from his nap. "Maybe there is a spell cast over all this place," she went on. "Let's go and see if we can find somebody that's alive."

They went out of the yard together and took the dusty road toward the town.

They soon came in sight of the Parlow house and carpenter shop.

"We can't go beyond that," said Carolyn May. "Aunty Rose told us not to. And Uncle Joe says the carpenter-man isn't a pleasant man."

She looked wistfully at the premises. The cottage seemed quite as much under the "spell" as had been those dwellings at The Corners. But from the shop came the sound of a plane shrieking over a long board.

"Oh, Princey!" gasped Carolyn May "I b'lieve he's making long, curly shavings!"

If there was one thing Carolyn May adored it was curls.

Suddenly Mr. Jedidiah Parlow looked up and saw the wistful, dust-streaked face under the black hat brim and above the black frock. He stared at her for fully a minute, poising the plane over his work. Then he put it down and came to the door of the shop.

"You're Hannah Stagg's little girl aren't you?" he asked.

"Yes, sir," she said, and sighed. Dear me, he knew who she was right away! There would not be any chance of her getting a suit of long curls.

"You've come here to live, have you?" said Mr. Parlow slowly.

"Yes, sir. You see, my papa and mamma were lost at sea—with the Dunraven. It was a mistake, I guess," sighed the little girl, "for they weren't fighting anybody. But the Dunraven got in the way of some ships that were fighting, in a place called the Mediterranean ocean, and the Dunraven was sunk, and only a few folks were saved from it. My papa and mamma weren't saved."

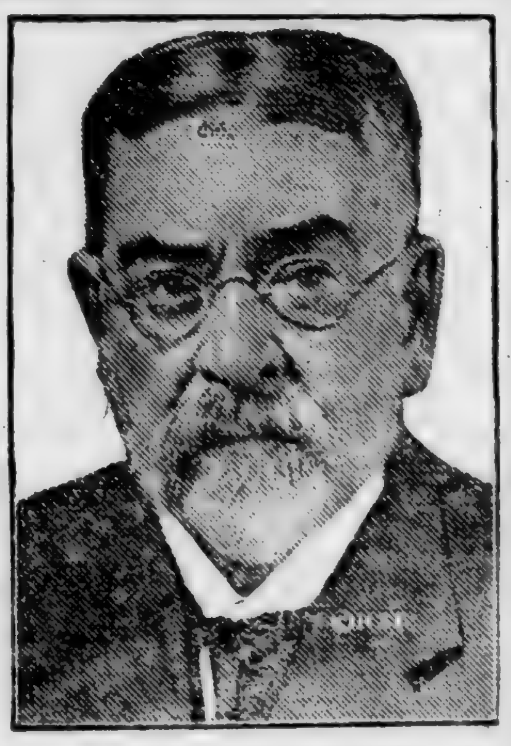
Carolyn learns why her uncle and Amanda Parlow are now so "mad" that they do not speak as they pass each other by. Read all about it in the next installment.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

When Dame Fortune goes calling she utterly disregards "at home" days.

OUT-OF-ORDINARY PEOPLE

LINCOLN'S SURVIVING SON



Robert Todd Lincoln, the only surviving son of President Abraham Lincoln, who recently celebrated his seventy-fifth birthday anniversary, now makes his home in Washington.

Robert T. Lincoln was the eldest son of the president. His early schooling was received at an academy in Springfield, Ill. By the time he had attained college age his father was enabled to send him to the University of Illinois. His graduation from that institution was followed by a term at Exeter academy, after which he entered Harvard university, where he was a student during the greater part of the Civil war period.

Completing his course at Harvard in 1864, young Lincoln applied for admission to the military service and was commissioned captain, serving on the staff of General Grant throughout the final campaign of the war.

Following the assassination of his father, Mr. Lincoln returned to Chicago, where he resumed his law studies, and in 1867 was admitted to the bar.

Mr. Lincoln was appointed secretary of war in President Garfield's cabinet in 1881. In 1889 he was again called into the public service, President Harrison appointing him as United States minister to Great Britain.

BRITISH LITERARY ENVOY

Lord Charnwood, traveler, writer and home rule advocate, has come to this country at the invitation of the Illinois centennial committee. An author of a book on Abraham Lincoln, the British peer delivered a lecture October 5 on the martyred president at the celebration in Springfield.

Lord Charnwood's trip is of more than usual importance, for he is chairman of a subcommittee of the committee for promoting an intellectual entente among the allied and friendly countries, recently formed by the Royal Society of Literature. Lord Charnwood's committee was formed for American relations. He will remain until next January.

A liberal, a supporter of Gladstone and home rule, an ardent admirer of Lincoln and a student of his life and times, the British peer is peculiarly fitted to promote mutual understanding and sympathy between his country and the United States. Lord Charnwood, for some years before the war an earnest advocate of a national and compulsory system of military training, has since the outbreak of hostilities had much to do, first with voluntary enlistment and later with the administration of the military service acts.

NEW IMPERIAL CHANCELLOR

Prince Maximilian of Berlin, the new imperial chancellor of Germany, has been known as the chief of the Delbrueck moderates and opponents of the pan-Germans. Once before, upon the fall of Chancellor Michaelis, November 1, 1917, he was put forward as the moderates' candidate for the chancellorship. His name, however, did not go before the emperor, as Prince Maximilian objected for dynastic reasons.

At that time there were vague rumors concerning Prince Maximilian to the effect that in moderate circles there was under way a movement having for its ultimate objective the dethronement of Emperor William and the choice of Prince Maximilian as his successor. These rumors, however, were never confirmed, although there seemed to be some foundation for them.

In his book, "My Four Years in Germany," former Ambassador James W. Gerard paid a tribute to Prince Maximilian and expressed admiration for him.

DID GREAT WORK FOR BRITAIN

Lieut. Col. J. S. Wardlaw Milne, I. D. F., who has been making a speaking tour of the United States at the request of Lord Chelmsford, viceroy of India, has done some very remarkable work for the British government since the war started in 1914.

Colonel Milne is commander of the artillery garrison at Bombay, India; president of the advisory Indian shipping board, a member of the viceroy's council, head of the largest shipping concern in Bombay and one of the largest individual ship owners in the near East.

Having his experience, knowledge and executive ability, Colonel Milne at the outbreak of the war was called upon by the British government to organize a deep-sea transport system between Indian ports and France. His first work was the shipping to the west front men and supplies from India. He went to work with tremendous energy, and early in August, 1914, one fine morning 64 troop ships sailed from Bombay to France as a result of his labors.

The following October Turkey declared war against England, and that meant that England had to protect the Suez canal. It was decided to send Indian troops to Mesopotamia. A new army was organized, and through the efforts of Colonel Milne transported to Mesopotamia, together with all needed supplies.

It is well to remember at this point that there is no wood and no stone in Mesopotamia; nothing but a desert of sand, although centuries ago that country was rich and fertile. It became necessary to transport everything needed for an army from Bombay by sea and then 700 miles on land from Basra, at the head of the Persian gulf. The entire success of the expedition depended upon organization of the transport service, and this service was put into successful operation by Colonel Milne.

IN ANOTHER KEY

HER EXPENSIVE HAT.

A woman entered a car rather out of breath and presented a singular appearance, for instead of a hat she was balancing a huge basket on her head with as much grace and ease as if it had been her Sunday bonnet. She could just manage to get through the doorway, but she sat down with the basket gracefully poised on her head.

"All fares, please," said the conductor, "and I shall want twopence for that there basket, mum."

"Get away with yer," she said. "D'ye charge anything for ladies' hats?"

"No, mum."

"Thin get on with yer work. This 'er basket is a-going to be my hat."—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

Obeying Orders.

Mistress—What are you doing, Martha?

Martha—The doctor told me to take iron for me blood and I'm trying to melt the poker.

Mistress—But, Martha, you can't drink melted iron!

Martha—Then I'll have to wait till it cools.

BIT

Wifey—They say there's a sucker born every minute.

Hubby—Yes, but he's not a real sucker until he marries.

Men's and Women's Work.

A woman runs a street car swift
Or in a building starts the lift,
While man with all his brain and brawn
Can't learn to sew a button on.

Sure Enough.

Yeast—I understand for the convenience of travelers there has been invented a pocket electric heater, taking current from a light socket, which will boil a quart of water in three minutes.

Crimsonbeak—Well, tell me, if you can, what good is a quart of hot water for a bath for a traveling man?

Its Style.

"Mrs. Comeup gave me an invitation to visit them."

"Did she ask you for a week-end down at their barcarole in the suburbs?"

It Explains a Lot, at That.

"How do you account for his popularity?"

"Possibly it's because he concedes without argument other people's right to all the good things of life and doesn't act as though he were sharing with them joys that should be exclusively his."

Homely.

"Is she homely?"

"I wouldn't put it that way, but I would say that if ever she's tried for murder the jury will convict her."

Through His Paces.

"What's the matter, old chap? You look sort of foolish."

"I feel foolish. Some of my wife's distant relatives are coming to call and I'll have to be trotted out so they can all see what kind of a critter she got."

The Way of It.

"This man raised a large family with ease."

"How did he manage to do it?"

"He took them up in the hotel elevator he was running."

Compensation.

His Wife—Mother's going to make us a little visit. I know you don't object to having her here for a short time.

The Jokesmith—Oh, I can stand it. Out of a week's visit I get enough material for a year's supply of mother-in-law jokes.

His Qualification.

"That horse is too sensitive to use for hunting."

"All the better. He will be quicker to take a fence."

Headache

THOUSANDS OF WOMEN suffer miserably from periodic attacks of headache, never dreaming that a permanent cure may be had. Headache nearly always results from some disorder of the stomach, liver or bowels. Take Chamberlain's Tablets. They will correct these disorders and there will be no more headache. Many have been permanently cured by Chamberlain's Tablets.

OFFICIAL FOOD NEWS

By Dr. Harry E. Barnard,
Federal Food Administrator for Indiana

Manufacturers of gelatine preparations who will agree to supply hospitals and similar institutions will be accorded sugar as essential industries.

Every woman in Switzerland county is expected to join a United States Food Club. Mrs. E. P. Downey, county president, has planned a house-to-house canvass for membership.

D. A. Epperson of Princeton was found to have gone away from home and purchased sugar in violation of the official regulations. As a penalty he was permitted to pay $10 into the local chapter of the Red Cross.

Effective October 15 the food administration will expect consumers to purchase their allotment semimonthly. This will eliminate irregularities in the distribution and the exact apportionment on a basis of two pounds per person per month, saving approximately 200,000,000 pounds of sugar annually, it is estimated.

Because he was found to have hoarded sugar, Clarence Cook, a farmer living near North Manchester, was reclassified by his local draft board and from a deferred class put into class A-1 and certified for service. His father-in-law, John Mennecker, was permitted to make a contribution of $25 to the Red Cross for the same offense.

No licenses for the importation of coffee into the United States will be issued by the United States Food Administration, except to the United States sugar equalization board. Outstanding licenses were revoked October 18. The food administration urges a universal policy of economy in the use of coffee in order that shipping requirements may be reduced to a minimum. Annual importations of coffee into the United States exceed 500,000 tons, and strictest conservation is regarded as necessary to avoid enforced rationing.

Buy Your Coal Now

The following has just been recevied from the state fuel administration:

"The domestic coal problem for Indiana will be solved if 20 per cent. more of the households will at once get in their winter's supply. The United States fuel administration for Indiana insists that it is necessary, if the state is to go into the winter feeling secure, to increase the household storage within the next thirty days.

"Every effort is being made to prevent the possibility of the forced close down of industrial plants during the extreme weather of the winter. The fuel administration points to the fact that industrial storage at this time is pretty much limited to plants having war contracts and to public utilities. The so called nonessential factories are now dependent and will be dependent during the winter on the current mine production; and if the household demands of the state are so heavy that they make serious inroads on the current production, industrial plants will have to suffer; and, as a result of their closing down or cutting down operations, working people will feel the effects in their pay envelopes.

"There has been a greater storage of domestic coal in Indiana than ever before, but the fuel authorities insist that it lacks somewhat of being enough to remove all anxiety from the situation. Consequently, those who have failed to buy coal should get busy at once and see to it that they are protected against the winter demands.

"The fuel administration does not deny that the anthracite situation is most unsatisfactory and uncertain. It is advising everyone who can possibly do so to protect himself with bituminous coal or wood, because it can not, at this time, give positive assurance that anthracite coal will be had in any community. It is doing its utmost to accelerate shipments from the anthracite fields; but results, thus far, do not justify any one in holding back in the hope of obtaining their full requirements of anthracite.

"Play safe and buy your bituminous coal or wood now is the reply the fuel administration is making to all inquiries regarding the winter prospects."

J. Y. W. McCLELLAN, Co.
Food Administrator.

Don't Be Careless About Your Health

When the liver is not acting properly, the system becomes full of poisonous accumulations, the kidneys and intestinal glands become sluggish and a general debilitated and nervous condition exists. The blood becomes impure, the circulation sluggish and the brain clouded.

A neglected liver causes chronic constipation, jaundice, gall stones and very often cancer.

Glando Tonic acts upon the whole glandular system, of which the liver is the chief gland. If this glandular system is in good working condition, disease has no chance to fasten itself upon you. The best time to doctor is when you begin to feel tired, achy or languid.

To neglect one's self when that tired, draggy feeling is present may mean weeks of severe illness. Let Glando Tonic remove that feeling and give you life and health.

Mothers who have nursing babies should use Glando Tonic to keep their bowels well regulated and their system in good condition. This will regulate baby's bowels and help it to withstand the heat and germs of summer, Glando Tonic can be obtained of druggists or direct from the Gland-Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind. Price, 50 cents.

LOOK AT CHILD'S TONGUE IF SICK, CROSS, FEVERISH

HURRY, MOTHER! REMOVE POISONS FROM LITTLE STOMACH, LIVER, BOWELS.

GIVE CALIFORNIA SYRUP OF FIGS AT ONCE IF BILIOUS OR CONSTIPATED.

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, it is a sure sign that your little one's stomach, liver and bowels needs a gentle, thorough cleansing at once.

When peevish, cross, listless, pale, doesn't sleep, doesn't eat or act naturally, or is feverish, stomach sour, breath bad; has stomach-ache, sore throat, diarrhœa, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of the little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again.

You needn't coax sick children to take this harmless "fruit laxative;" they love its delicious taste, and it always makes them feel splendid.

Ask your druggist for a bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly on the bottle. Beware of counterfeits sold here. To be sure you get the genuine, ask to see that it is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company." Refuse any other kind with contempt.—Adv.

INDIGESTION, GAS, UPSET STOMACH

HURRY! JUST EAT ONE TABLET OF PAPE'S DIAPEPSIN FOR INSTANT RELIEF.

No waiting! When meals don't fit and you belch gas, acids and undigested food. When you feel indigestion pain, lumps of distress in stomach, heartburn or headache. Here is instant relief.

Just as soon as you eat a tablet of Pape's Diapepsin all the dyspepsia, indigestion and stomach distress ends. These pleasant, harmless tablets of Pape's Diapepsin always make sick, upset stomachs feel fine at once and they cost so little at drug stores.—Adv.

SPANISH INFLUENZA—WHAT IT IS AND HOW IT SHOULD BE TREATED

Nothing New—Simply the Old Grip or La Grippe That Was Epidemic in 1889-90, Only Then It Came From Russia by Way of France and This Time by Way of Spain

Go to Bed and Stay Quiet—Take a Laxative—Eat Plenty of Nourishing Food—Keep Up your Strength—Nature Is the Only "Cure"

ALWAYS CALL A DOCTOR

NO OCCASION FOR PANIC

Spanish influenza, which appeared in Spain in May, has all the appearances of grip, or la grippe, which has swept over the world in numerous epidemics as far back as history runs. Hippocrates refers to an epidemic in 412 B. C., which is regarded by many to have been influenza. Every century has had its attacks. Beginning with 1831 this country has had five epidemics, the last in 1889-90.

There is no occasion for panic—influenza itself has a very low percentage of fatalities—not over one death out of every 400 cases, according to the N. C. board of health. The chief danger lies in complications arising, attacking principally patients in a run-down condition—those who don't go to bed soon enough or those who get up too early.

THE SYMPTOMS

Grip, or influenza, as it is now called, usually begins with a chill, followed by aching, feverishness, and sometimes nausea and dizziness, and a general feeling of weakness and depression. The temperature is from 100 to 104, and the fever usually lasts from three to five days. The germs attack the mucous membrane or lining of the air passages, nose, throat and bronchial tubes; there is usually a hard cough, especially bad at night; oftentimes a sore throat or tonsilitis, and frequently all the appearances of a severe head cold.

THE TREATMENT

Go to bed at the first symptoms, not only for your own sake, but to avoid spreading the disease to others—take a purgative, eat plenty of nourishing food, remain perfectly quiet and don't worry. Quinine, aspirin or Dover's Powders, etc., may be administered by the physician's directions to relieve the aching. But there is no cure or specific for influenza—the disease must run its course. Nature herself will throw off the attack if only you keep up your strength. The chief danger lies in the complications which may arise. Influenza so weakens the bodily resistance that there is danger of pneumonia or bronchitis developing, and sometimes inflammation of the middle ear, or heart affections. For these reasons it is very important that the patient remain in bed until his strength returns—stay in bed at least two days or more after the fever has left you, or if you are over 50 or not strong stay in bed four days or more, according to the severity of the attack.

EXTERNAL APPLICATIONS

In order to stimulate the lining of the air passages to throw off the grippe germs, to aid in loosening the phlegm and keeping the air passages open, thus making the breathing easier, Vick's VapoRub will be found effective. Hot, wet towels should be applied over the throat, chest and back between the shoulder blades to open the pores. Then VapoRub should be rubbed in over the parts until the skin is red, spread on thickly and cover with two thicknesses of hot flannel cloths. Leave the clothing loose around the neck, as the heat of the body liberates the ingredients in the form of vapors. These vapors, inhaled with each breath, carry the medication directly to the parts affected. At the same time VapoRub is absorbed through and stimulates the skin, attracting the blood to the surface, and thus aids in relieving the congestion within.

HOW TO AVOID THE DISEASE

Evidence seems to prove that this is a germ disease, spread principally by human contact, chiefly through coughing, sneezing or spitting. So avoid persons having colds—which means avoiding crowds—common drinking cups, roller towels, etc. Keep up your bodily strength by plenty of exercise in the open air, and good food. Above all, avoid colds, as colds irritate the lining of the air passages and render them much better breeding places for the germs.

KEEP FREE FROM COLDS

Use Vick's VapoRub at the very first sign of a cold. For a head cold, melt a little VapoRub in a spoon and inhale the vapors, or better still, use VapoRub in a benzoin steam kettle. If this is not available, use an ordinary teakettle. Fill half-full of boiling water, put in half a teaspoon of VapoRub from time to time—keep the kettle just slowly boiling and inhale the steam arising.

Note—Vick's VapoRub is the discovery of a North Carolina druggist, who found how to combine, in salve form, Menthol and Camphor with such volatile oils as Eucalyptus, Thyme, Cubebs, etc., so that when the salve is applied to the body heat, these ingredients are liberated in the form of vapors.

VapoRub is comparatively new in New York State and New England and a few Western states where it is just now being introduced, but in other sections of the country it is the standard home remedy in more than a million homes for all forms of cold troubles. Over six million jars were sold last year. VapoRub can be had in three sizes at all druggists. It is particularly recommended for children's croup and colds, since it is externally applied and therefore can be used as freely as desired without the slightest harmful effects.

Good Work of Army Observers at the Morgan Disaster—Ordnance Department Tells of Production of Small Arms Ammunition.

(From Committee on Public Information.)

Washington.—Complete returns from 48 states show that a total of 12,966,594 men between the ages of eighteen and twenty, inclusive, and thirty-two and forty-five, inclusive, registered on September 12, 1918, in accordance with the latest selective service act. This figure, however, does not include registrations which local boards have received by mail since September 12, nor the enrollment of men who were absent from the country on that day.

Further additions to this total will be made by the registrations in Alaska, Porto Rico and Hawaii to be conducted on later dates to be fixed by the president. The registration on September 12 exceeded by 187,730 the provost marshal's preliminary estimates. It is expected that the aggregate registration of men between the ages of eighteen and twenty and thirty-two and forty-five will aggregate above 13,000,000.

The total registrations under the selective draft since the outbreak of the war is 23,456,021. Registrations on June 5, 1917, were 9,586,508; those on June 5, 1918, were 744,865; those on August 24, 1918, were 158,054, and those on September 12, 1918, were 12,966,594.

The subjoined table shows the total number of men registered in each of the states on September 12, 1918, and the total of all men enrolled in the four registrations:

Consumption of beans by the United States army averages 62½ tons a day. Dried beans are a popular dish among Uncle Sam's soldiers, and they receive the best that can be furnished. Beans have a high value as food and are especially suitable for men under intensive training, experts of the war department have found.

All the beans required by the United States and the allies for the coming year will be obtained through one purchaser, the food administration grain corporation, which has made arrangements to inspect and pay cash for beans in the producing fields. This will eliminate delay in payments and insure the purchase of beans at a lower figure.

Two hundred men employed in the field artillery erecting department of the Rock Island arsenal, Rock Island, Ill., have volunteered not only to forego their customary Thanksgiving holiday in order that they might donate a full day's production to the army, but have also proposed to give their wages for that day to the American Red Cross. As they will be paid at the rate of "double time," their contribution to the Red Cross will be a considerable sum.

Brig. Gen. John T. Thompson, director of arsenals, on learning of the men's action, sent them a letter of appreciation.

Checks for allotments which are made by American soldiers through the quartermaster corps of the army are sent to practically every part of the world, the principal exceptions being the central powers and Turkey. Two are sent to Bulgaria. In September, which is the last month for which a report is available, the finance division of the quartermaster corps forwarded 2,921 allotment checks to allottees residing in foreign countries of Europe, Africa, Asia, South America, Australia, Central America, and to Iceland.

An American and an English officer, soaring in an airplane above the Morgan (N. J.) shell-loading plant, which exploded and went afire recently, directed the battle against the conflagration so as to check the flames and probably prevent further loss of life and property and to save from destruction 8,000,000 pounds of TNT which was threatened.

The plane used came from the radio experimental laboratory at Camp Alfred Vail, further down on the Jersey coast. Lieut. Cyrus F. Smythe was the pilot and Maj. H. L. Armstrong of the British army, stationed at the plant, was the observer. Flying over the wrecked works at an altitude of 1,000 feet, Lieutenant Smythe so maneuvered his plane that Major Armstrong was able to see the flames progressing toward warehouses containing thousands of tons of TNT and to make out openings in the fire and wreckage through which men could be sent to combat the blaze and save property. While the plane was hovering over the burning plant several terrific explosions hurled molten steel and blazing debris dangerously near it and caused concussions that rocked the ship perilously.

Two attempts were made by airplanes to get photographs of the fire and explosions, but though a number of exposures were made at different elevations between 50 and 2,000 feet above the plant, the films were worthless, doubtless through accidents to the trigger and shutter caused by the intense heat.

Violation of sugar regulations and falsification of reports by a concern which operates sixty retail stores in Boston and vicinity has resulted in a contribution of $20,000 to the United war work campaign. In addition to the payment of this large sum each of the company's stores will be required to display for 30 days a sign declaring that it has violated the United States food administration regulations and pledging compliance with its rulings in future.

None of the stores was closed because the food administration realized that many people would be inconvenienced if they were even temporarily put out of business. An investigation by the food administration disclosed that the company had been knowingly obtaining sugar which it was not entitled to receive under the system of allotment. Officials of the company, it was testified, had submitted erroneous reports to the food administration in its applications for excessive amounts of sugar certificates. The president of the company offered to contribute $20,000 to the United States war work campaign in lieu of further action, and to show that the firm regretted violations by subordinate officials.

Announcement is made by the war department that dependents and beneficiaries of officers and men having claims under the war risk insurance act do not need outside assistance in collecting allowances, allotments, compensation or insurance. The bureau of war risk insurance of the treasury department, it is stated, arranges all such matters and settles all claims without charge. The war department points out that agents who impose upon claimants are liable to severe punishment.

The war department is co-operating with the treasury department to protect the beneficiaries of officers and men who have died or been killed against the activities of certain claim agents who seek to defraud the wives, mothers and dependents of these heroes.

Production of small-arms ammunition (cartridges for machine guns, rifles, revolvers and pistols) has passed the three-billion mark, the ordnance department announces. A grand total of 3,054,160,110 cartridges had been accepted by inspectors of that department up to October 11.

Of this number 2,510,628,510 are service ball cartridges for machine guns and rifles, and 275,524,200 are for revolvers and pistols of .45 caliber. The remainder are miscellaneous cartridges, many of them types specially adapted for use in airplanes (such as tracer, incendiary and armor-piercing cartridges) and a limited number are for training purposes.

Officials of the United States food administration estimate that 9,000,000 persons eat daily in hotels, restaurants, dining cars and other eating places which are affected by the regulations about to be enforced to save food. One of the new rules is that an allowance of two pounds of sugar for each 90 meals served is to be the limit for such establishments.

In addition to economizing food the rules have for their object the simplification of service. Meat and vegetables are to be served on one plate, thus obviating side dishes. There will be a lesser number of articles of food and a reduction in the number and sizes of menu cards. These regulations are expected to save labor and essential materials.

Twelve large circus tents and 100 sideshow tents have been purchased by the American Red Cross for shipment to France and other parts of Europe. The officials of the Red Cross assure the American public that the organization is not intending to start circuses but bought the tents for use as temporary warehouses in France and elsewhere close to the fighting lines. The tents will protect immense quantities of supplies in places where warehouse space is not easily obtainable.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

AURORA BOREALIS.

"I am going to tell you a story tonight," said Daddy, "about the aurora borealis."

He paused for a moment and Nick and Nancy looked at each other first, then at him.

"What in the world—" began Nancy.

"Goodness!" exclaimed Nick.

"Let's not say anything," whispered Nancy, "until we know."

So both children kept very still and after a moment or two Daddy said: "In the first place I think I will tell you what an aurora borealis is."

Both the children chuckled, then they laughed aloud.

"We were pretending we knew," said Nancy.

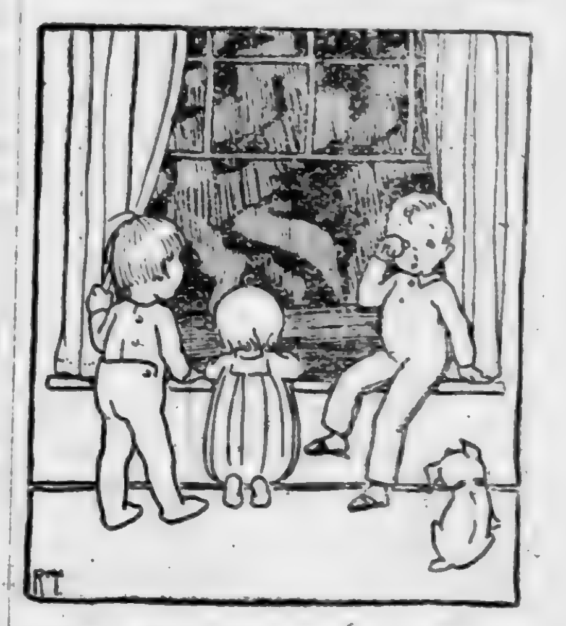
"That is, we thought if we kept very quiet you wouldn't know that we didn't understand," said Nick, "and that you'd tell us anyway."

Daddy laughed and said, "I thought as much."

And Nick and Nancy laughed again and said, "That's what we thought."

"The aurora borealis," commenced Daddy, "consists of lights in the sky which are very, very brilliant. They are supposed to be a mixture of electricity in the air high above us.

"Usually they are to be found up north where the weather is colder than it is here, but once the aurora borealis took a trip, and it is of that trip that I want to tell you.



Children Were Allowed to Get Out of Bed.

"'Come on, come on,' said Madame Aurora Borealis, 'let's take a trip.'

"So all the lights got together and said:

"'Yes, we have been here so long it would be nice to see more of the world.'

"'Can we leave the sky?' asked the green light, for the aurora borealis is made up of many different colored lights.

"'No, we can never leave the sky,' said Madame Aurora, the main light of all. 'The sky has always been our home, it will always be our home, and it is now our home.'

"The lights didn't weep or grow dim, for they were much excited at going on a trip. They had only asked about leaving the sky out of curiosity. They would really have been much frightened if they had gone down to the earth and had seen trains and carriages and automobiles and people.

"They were quite willing to see everything from afar and they loved the great, big sky.

"'Let's start,' said Madame Aurora, and off the Northern Lights went.

"Soon they were much further south. They were all there too, the red light, rose light, brown light, green light, yellow light and bright white light—all had joined Madame Aurora Borealis on her trip farther south.

"From doorsteps people looked up at the northern lights.

"'See how bright they are!' someone would say.

"'It looks to me as though the heavens were afire,' another would remark.

"'Do you see that long green light?' one would ask.

"And another would answer, 'There is a crimson one next to it.'

"Everyone was excited and interested in the northern lights. Never had they been seen so brightly, so clearly and so wonderfully. The colors were amazing! They were so gay and vivid and bright.

"Children were allowed to get out of bed to see the wonderful lights and with sleepy eyes they looked at the bright colors in the sky.

"'How wonderful they are,' everyone said.

"And so the lights entertained the people down on the earth.

"'They certainly did enjoy us,' the green light said when it was back up in the northern sky.

"'Why, they thought the sky was on fire,' the crimson light said.

"'Our trip was a great success,' said Madame Aurora Borealis. 'Folks will talk about us for days. We gave ourselves pleasure as well as them, for it is an honor to be thought wonderful by people who see so many wonderful things.'"

Teddy Was Wise.

The other day Teddy's father wanted to give him a dose of castor oil concealed in raspberry jam. But the boy refused the delicious-looking spoonful suspiciously.

"Why," said his father, "have you taken such a sudden dislike to your favorite jam?"

"Because it's mined!" answered Teddy.

DANDRUFF MAKES HAIR FALL OUT

A small bottle of "Danderine" keeps hair thick, strong, beautiful.

Girls! Try this! Doubles beauty of your hair in a few moments.

Within ten minutes after an application of Danderine you can not find a single trace of dandruff or falling hair and your scalp will not itch, but what will please you most will be after a few weeks' use, when you see new hair, fine and downy at first—yes—but really new hair—growing all over the scalp.

A little Danderine immediately doubles the beauty of your hair. No difference how dull, faded, brittle and scraggy, just moisten a cloth with Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. The effect is amazing—your hair will be light, fluffy and wavy, and have an appearance of abundance; an incomparable lustre, softness and luxuriance.

Get a small bottle of Knowlton's Danderine for a few cents at any drug store or toilet counter, and prove that your hair is as pretty and soft as any—that it has been neglected or injured by careless treatment—that's all—you surely can have beautiful hair and lots of it if you will just try a little Danderine.—Adv.

Riches need not spoil a man.

It's Acid-Stomach That Makes Millions Sick and Suffer

Life is dark—not worth much to the man or woman with an acid-stomach.

Acid-stomach kills Hope, Ambition, Energy, Courage. It saps the strength of the strongest body—impoverishes the blood—causes untold suffering—makes millions weak, unfit and brings on premature old age.

You know what acid-mouth does to teeth and gums—how the acid literally eats through the hard enamel, causing the teeth to decay. Just imagine, then, what havoc an acid stomach must do to the delicate organization of the stomach.

Millions of people are weak and unfit, suffering all the time, in one way or another, from superacidity or acid-stomach.

They don't seem dangerously sick. Just ailing. Going through life weak, listless, dragging one foot after another. They're nervous and irritable; lack power and punch, frequently have severe attacks of blinding, splitting headaches; subject to fits of melancholia and mental depression. And nearly always their stomachs are out of order, even though many experience no actual stomach pains—digestion poor—never getting anywhere near the full strength from their food.

So, you see, it's just this—acid-stomach—that is holding so many people back—sapping up the strength they should get from their food—taking away their vigor and vitality—leaving them weak and inefficient.

Get rid of the excess acid. That's the secret of good health and is the only way to obtain good digestion and assimilation. It is the right way to be well and keep strong. Ordinary tonics won't do any lasting good. The best they can do is to spur up your appetite. When the stimulating effects wear off, you are worse off than ever.

A modern remedy makes it possible to remove excess acid without the slightest discomfort. It is called EATONIC, in the form of pleasant tasting tablets. Their action in the stomach is a good deal like a piece of blotting paper taking up a drop of ink—they literally absorb the injurious excess acid and carry it away through the intestines.

Begin using EATONIC right now—today—and get on the road to bounding, vigorous, vibrant health. Thousands upon thousands of people who have used EATONIC are enthusiastic in its praise. They say they never dreamed that anything could bring them such quick relief.

EATONIC is absolutely guaranteed so get a big 50c box from your druggist. If it does not help you your money will be refunded. If your druggist does not keep EATONIC, send your name and address to the Eatonic Remedy Company, 1018 S. SUBSTITUTE MILK FOR BOOZE

Milk contains all the elements needed to build up and sustain the body. That is why workers feel satisfied after drinking it. The shipbuilders of Seattle are using 10,000 pint bottles of milk every lunch hour, and the only reason they do not use 20,000 is that there is a limit to the supply. And as for ice cream cones, great piles of them go like hot cakes every noon.

The heaviest consumers of milk and ice cream in Seattle shipyards are said to be the steel construction men—riveters, plate hangers and the forgemen. This work exacts a heavy toll on physical strength and these workers find milk an element that puts "pep" and vigor into them.

"The change from beer to milk has been a mighty good thing for everybody concerned," said W. R. Bailey, who has worked in the shipyard pattern shops off and on nearly thirty years. "In the old days a foreman could never tell how many men he would have on the job the next day after pay day. It was the rule for the men to break for the nearest saloon as soon as they received their checks and most of them anchored there until they were turned out—broke. I've known fellows in those days that couldn't buy a pair of socks because they never had anything left after the first visit to the saloon. When some of the men did come back to work they were sodden and dull and incapable of doing a good day's work.

"Things are different now. These men who are drinking milk instead of beer have clear skins, clear vision and clear minds. They are able to do a fair day's work every day and can make extra effort when it's necessary."

SAVING MAN POWER.

New Hampshire, like other commonwealths made dry by state enactment, has proved that prohibition results in marked conservation of man power and money power. Here is the record of "drunks" of eight cities for the first month after the law went into effect contrasted with the corresponding month under license:

	1918.	1917.
Berlin	3	79
Concord	6	54
Dover	6	37
Franklin	2	39
Manchester	48	345
Nashua	24	81
Portsmouth	11	95
Somersworth	3	22
Totals	103	752

This represents 649 "drunks" saved in one month in these eight cities. It is safe to assume that an equal number of real "drunks," not arrested, were unable to work after pay day and out of a job because drunk. Allowing a conservative estimate of only five days' loss of time for each drunk (many were 30 days) we have 6,490 days' work saved to New Hampshire by eight cities alone in one month of prohibition. At $3 a day this is nearly $20,000 in money.

BIBLE CLASS DISCONTINUED BECAUSE OF PROHIBITION.

In a four-mile trip through the South and the far West, Miss Anna A. Gordon, president of the National W. C. T. U., found the people in dry territory well satisfied with prohibition, and in the large cities like Portland, Ore., and Seattle, Wash., no industrial disturbance had followed its adoption.

"The only criticism, I heard," she said, "was in Portland, where they said it had put out of business the largest Bible class in the country. Of course I was shocked to hear that, but when the president of the local Woman's Christian Temperance union told me that she had been for a number of years teaching that Bible class every Sunday morning in the county jail, and that prohibition had taken her class away for her, I went on my way rejoicing."

ABSTINENCE AND EFFICIENCY.

As regards straight shooting it is everyone's experience that abstinence is necessary for efficiency. By careful and prolonged tests, the shooting efficiency of the men was proved to be 30 per cent worse after the rum ration than before. What is true of the soldier is true of the man who makes the supplies for the soldiers and sailors. Neither civilian nor soldier can be at his best for work in the trenches or in the factory when he uses intoxicating liquor. It takes three or four men at home to support one soldier in the trenches. If the civilians at home destroy their efficiency through drink they destroy the support of the army just as effectively as if the evil result came in direct contact with the army itself.—Admiral Jellicoe.

A SOLDIER'S PLEA

In the department, "Letters from the People," of the Chicago Herald and Examiner we find this:

Sir—As the son of a father brutalized through drink, I urge you to do everything in your power to help the prohibition measure. I am leaving for camp realizing the agonies that my mother is suffering without the aid of her three boys, all of whom have gone to the front.

TOWN MEN HELP TO GATHER AMERICA'S FOOD

"Doctor, Lawyer, Merchant Chief" Describes Some of the Town Teams That Aided Farmers.

SOLVE HARVEST LABOR PROBLEM

Story of How Kansas Farmers Fought and Overcame Difficulties This Year.

CITIES AND TOWNS HELPED

Faced by Big Shortage of Farm Hands and War Calling More Men Federal, State and City Forces Unite in Saving Grain.

Kansas farmers this year faced a harvest labor problem as serious as any in the country, it is believed by officials of the United States department of agriculture. The story of how Kansas fought its difficulties and overcame them demonstrates the high spirit of patriotism in the country districts, the willingness of the cities and towns to help out in emergencies, and points the way for other states to meet similar problems next year.

Seven million acres of wheat called for harvest help. The army and war industries were taking increasing numbers of men from the state. Railroad fares had been raised, impeding the movement of workers. A shortage of from 90,000 to 100,000 men during the harvest season was indicated by a labor survey made early in the year by the county agents in co-operation with the schools.

The problem was up to the state farm help specialist (representing the department of agriculture and the extension division of the state agricultural college), the United States department of labor, the county agents and the farm bureaus. They received co-operation from chambers of commerce and business men's clubs. The farm help specialist visited 85 of the 105 Kansas counties and discussed the labor situation with farm and town people at county meetings. Later at eight district meetings delegates from the farm bureaus and other farmers' organizations from every county recommended wage scales for the districts and that labor be paid by the hour instead of the day. At a state meeting 45 cents an hour was decided on as a fair wage.

Recruiting Town Men.

Late in May the farm help specialist developed a method of recruiting town and city men for help in the fields. Work was started under a proclamation by the governor through the county and emergency agents. Working with the chambers of commerce and retail merchants' associations definite records were obtained of approximately 30,000 men in over 500 towns and cities who were willing to answer the harvest call. Headquarters at Wichita and 20 local offices were opened by the department of labor to recruit men from outside the state. In farm bureau counties the agents in nearly every case accepted the responsibility of reporting the labor needs of the county to the federal labor offices and of distributing the harvest hands after their arrival. In Cheyenne and Rawlins counties this meant that the agents had to organize a transport system that brought the harvest hands in from the main line railroads by automobile, an average distance of about 30 miles. Assistance in this work was given by the agricultural agents of railroads.

The result was that Kansas lost none of its wheat crop. All of the grain has been safely harvested and is helping to turn the scales in the battle of food resources.

Thousands of Helpers Obtained.

Although complete data are not available from all counties, a definite record of 48,471 men being placed through the various co-operating agencies has been obtained. Of this number more than 18,000 were handled by the local labor offices of the department of labor and more than 3,000 were town men who went out to harvest through the federal labor offices in Kansas City and St. Joseph, Mo., and Kansas City, Atchison and Leavenworth, Kan. Sixty-nine counties that have county agents have reported that they cleared through their offices more than 18,000 harvest hands from outside the county and that more than 7,000 town men, organized as "twilight shock troops," went in squads to help in the evening.

These enumerations do not include a large number of retired farmers and other townspeople who helped in the harvest but did not register, and do not take account of thousands of boys. So great was the response of men in the emergency that less than 5 per cent of the women in Kansas were used as harvest helpers.

GET-TOGETHER SPIRIT

The more the farmer shows the get-together spirit the greater is the advantage accruing to him, personally and from a business standpoint. New ideas, progressive methods, valuable business connections can be gained only by rubbing elbows with the world outside his own fences.

Taking an active and positive part in community events, interchange of views with successful men of affairs, getting beyond the border of his county and state and mixing with people—this is to make himself felt in his own community. All this has a broadening value, not easy to compute in hard dollars and cents, but quite easy to sum up in profitable results.

Frugality vs. Shiftlessness.

Before the long, wet winter months set in, when the greater part of his machinery and implements are not in use, the thrifty farmer carefully goes over them, oiling, using paint when necessary, supplying broken or missing parts and putting everything under shelter. These and other frugal characteristics differentiate him from the shiftless, haphazard farmer who leaves his implements exposed to the weather, who lets the fences around his house and barn fall down, perfectly contented to throw a hoop over his corral gate rather than put on a new hinge or repair the old one.

The former, it may be taken for granted, is a plow-deep, use-fertilizer, cultivate-thoroughly and take-advantage-of-the-market farmer—in a word, a successful farmer; while the latter is a scratch-the-ground and trust-to-luck individual whose failure he attributes to anyone but himself.

No right-minded farmer could tolerate being in the second class; and, on the other hand, every farmer coming under that category ought to aspire to the first classification—and now is the time to start.

Farm Made to Pay.

For ten years a 500-acre farm in central Michigan failed to pay interest on the capital invested. One year after the owners had been induced to make certain radical changes the farm paid all expenses of operation and returned them 5 per cent on an investment of $60,000. These changes were:

Substitution of four-horse for two-horse machinery; substitution of better stock for unprofitable cows in the dairy herd; adoption of the silo plan; allowance to the foreman, in addition to his salary, of 10 per cent of the net income from the farm.

Expenses of operating the farm, but not the interest on the capital, were deducted from the income before the foreman received his percentage. The owners yielded to the plan when they found that for every dollar the foreman got under such an arrangement they would receive nine.

Soak Seed for Fall Garden.

Owing to the difficulty usually experienced in getting seeds planted in the fall garden to germinate, it is wise to soak them a few hours before planting. Cover the seeds lightly when planting, then soak the ground, and finish the covering with fine dry soil. The dust mulch will retain the moisture, enabling the seeds to germinate and to come up.

The best way to use manure on the garden land is to apply it broadcast and spread it abundantly.

WAR WORK

American women nurses are installed eight miles in the rear of the fighting lines "over there." Right here at home many women should learn nursing to take care of the sick or, in emergencies, the wounded. You can learn a great deal by obtaining the "Medical Adviser" a book of 1,000 pages, bound in cloth, containing chapters on First Aid, Bandaging, Anatomy, Hygiene, Sex Problems, Mother and Babe. 200 prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases; profusely illustrated by wood cuts and colored plates. Ask your druggist or send 50c. to Publisher, 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

If a woman is nervous or has dizzy spells, suffers from awful pains at regular or irregular intervals she should turn to a tonic made up of herbs, and without alcohol, which makes weak women strong and sick women well. It is Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. Then, for the liver and bowels nothing is so good as Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets.

Laporte, Ind.—"Eighteen years ago I first became acquainted with Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It was during expectancy and I was very frail and delicate. But the 'Favorite Prescription' strengthened me and I had comparatively no suffering. My baby was a strong, healthy girl and has always been fine and healthy. For the expectant mother I think there is nothing to equal 'Favorite Prescription.'

"The 'Pleasant Pellets' I keep in my medicine closet for immediate use and feel that I couldn't keep house without them."

Get New Kidneys!

The kidneys are the most overworked organs of the human body, and when they fail in their work of filtering out and throwing off the poisons developed in the system, things begin to happen.

One of the first warnings is pain or stiffness in the lower part of the back; highly colored urine; loss of appetite; indigestion; irritation, or even stone in the bladder. These symptoms indicate a condition that may lead to that dreaded and fatal malady, Bright's disease, for which there is said to be no cure.

Do not delay a minute. At the first indication of trouble in the kidney, liver, bladder or urinary organs start taking Gold Medal Haarlem Oil Capsules, and save yourself before it is too late. Instant treatment is necessary in kidney and bladder troubles. A delay is often fatal.

You can almost certainly find immediate relief in Gold Medal Haarlem Oil Capsules. For more than 200 years this famous preparation has been an unfailing remedy for all kidney, bladder and urinary troubles.

It is the pure, original Haarlem Oil your great-grandmother used. About two capsules each day will keep you toned up and feeling fine. Get it at any drug store, and if it does not give you almost immediate relief, your money will be refunded. Be sure you get the GOLD MEDAL brand. None other genuine. In boxes, three sizes.—Adv.

Red Cross Department

The annual election of officers for the local Red Cross Branch, took place last Wednesday evening at the M. P. church. The inclemency of the weather did not seem to hinder the attendance in the least. The reports were read of the work done during the past term of office, showing that the amount of cash on hands to be over $1,000 and that the sewing and knitting equaled the quota as assigned. Following the reports came the election of officers which resulted as follows:—

Chairman—Mrs. Belle Barney.
Vice Chr'm.—Mrs. Lora Leighty.
Secretary—Mrs. Agnes Monroe.

I am a laboring man and will be unable to see all the voters before the coming election. I have been a life-long resident of DeKalb county, and will appreciate any support you may give me.

Twite Hoodelmier

Under a new ruling, Christmas parcels for fighting men abroad will not be received by the postal authorities after Nov. 20. The Red Cross has made special arrangement for men in the navy. Each box to a sailor must be limited to 20 pounds, must measure not more than 2 cubic feet in volume, be of wood, well strapped and have hinged or screw top. All boxes must be opened and examined. Have a clear understanding with your local Red Cross before you decide on the contents of a box for a soldier or a sailor.

Perhaps you have been asked just what things make the best Christmas filling for a Red Cross carton. A suggested list of articles that any boy overseas will be glad to get for his Christmas includes: Cigars, pipes, pipe tobacco, hard candy (including hard, sweet chocolate), small tins of plum pudding, pocket knives, shaving soap, tooth paste and brushes, "snap-shots" and khaki colored handkerchiefs.

PARCEL FOR EVERYONE

The Red Cross has been invested with an important share in a plan to provide one Chrisnmas parcel for every soldier overseas.

The Plan.—Each American soldier overseas has received from his commanding officer one Christmas parcel label, which he will mail home to a person probably planning to send him a Christmas remembrance.

Recipients of these labels will take them to their local Red Cross chapter (or branch or auxiliary) and ask for a carton; fill the carton with articles not named in the list given below, taking care to keep the weight under 3 pounds, and return the filled carton to the Red Cross to be inspected, wrapped, weighed and left for mailing, with the overseas label and postage, paid by the sender, attached.

LIST OF BARRED ARTICLES

1. All spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented or other intoxicating liquors.
2. All kinds of poisons and all articles or compositions containing poison.
3. Explosives of all kinds.
4. Inflammable articles, including friction matches.
5. Infernal machines and chemical, mechanical or other compositions or devices which may ignite or explode.

Note.—Under this classification would come cigarette lighters, etc.

6. Liquids or liquefiable articels, fragile articles and other admissible matter when not packed in accordance with the requirements of the postal laws and regulations.
7. All other articles which may kill or in any wise hurt, harm or injure another or damage or deface or otherwise injure the mails or other property.

Nothing should go in a Christmas parcel which will not keep fresh from the time of packing until Christmas.

No liquids, no soft candies nor anything packed in glass will be accepted.

Several dainties packed in quarter-pound oblong tin boxes make a better gift than a large quantity of one kind of confection.

Use a twenty-seven-inch khaki-colored handkerchief to wrap the gifts.

The Red Cross Christmas parcel labels being sent home by the boys should reach their destinations here in the United States by Nov. 1. That will allow two weeks' time for filling them with Christmas surprises for the boys and delivering them at the local Red Cross rooms for mailing.

Chapters should be making arrangements in advance for handling the final rush. Committees appointed to direct the work in various localities will have to work fast to insure the success of the Christmas present shipment to soldier boys, for the postoffice department can not accept parcels after Nov. 20.

The war department wishes each man to receive only one parcel of standard size and weight. To carry out this plan, the army authorities are distributing Christmas-parcel labels to the men abroad, who will mail them to their relatives and friends. No parcel will be accepted for mailing by any postoffice unless it carry a label received from a man abroad.

A few days ago, it was announced that Red Cross chapters would provice cartons in which these Christmas parcels could be sent abroad; but these cartons will not be ready for distribution to local chapters until the latter part of October, which, according to advices from national headquarters, will give ample time for parcels to reach their destination by Dec. 25.

In the event of a Christmas parcel label being lost, no duplicate can be issued. This rule cannot be altered by anyone.

Lemon drops are soldiers' favorite candy; and are made of pure granulated sugar, flavored with an emulsion of lemon rind. About 200,000 pounds have been furnished by the army up to last August, and this constitutes 15 per cent. of the army candy supply.

BRASSARDS

Brassards are to be worn instead of mourning by members of families whose soldier or sailor has lost his life in the service. The Red Cross war council, at the request of the woman's committee, council of national defense, has undertaken the distribution of these brassards.

The first consignment, a limited number these brassards, is now at the division bureau of supplies. Requisitions from chapters for these black broadcloth arm bands, with gold stars attached, will be filled upon application to this bureau. It is the understanding that the brassards will be furnished without charge to the widows and parents of a soldier or sailor and at cost to other members of the family.

CHRISTMAS ROLL CALL

Now comes the Christmas roll call—Dec. 16-23. It is proposed by the Red Cross war council that in lieu of the usual sale of Red Cross seals at Christmas time, this roll call for universal membership in the Red Cross be made. This is a war time measure and specifically for the year 1919; and this action by the war council is prompted by a desire to insure, so far as may be, the maintenance and development of anti-tuberculosis work during the coming year, rather than to have its support contingent upon the usual sale of Christmas seals at a time when the country is being asked to consider so many important appeals to its sympathies and resources. This roll call will be conducted by Red Cross chapters with the co-operation of anti-tuberculosis associations, and is expected to be the most memorable campaign ever conducted by these two great organizations.

Statement to County Voters

Mr. Voter:—

When you investigate the past record of our county candidates, can you see any reason why you should not give them your support? If DeKalb county should go Republican, would that convince you that the people of the county are satisfied with our national administration or would you not rather conclude that a large number of the voters are dissatisfied with the president's war policy?

Our congressional and county candidates are all men of high repute and standing in the community in which they reside. They are 100 per cent. loyal and have proven it. Further, they are men who are perfectly qualified and competent to discharge the duties of the offices which they seek.

A vote for the men on the Democratic county ticket will be a vote to sustain the high standing and efficiency established by the Democrats in the county offices.

Disabled Soldiers

DeKalb county Red Cross chapter has recived the following letter from James L. Feiser, division director of department of civilian relief:

"The surgeon-general is to have charge of the physical reconstruction of every disabled soldier and sailor. Everything that medical science can do for him is to be done. He is not to be discharged from the army or navy until he is as nearly restored as possibfe and equipped with such artificial services as are necessary.

"When everything that medicine and surgery can do for him has been done, the disabled soldier or sailor will be discharged. But the goverhment does not lose interest. Instead, it offers him, through the board of vocational training, an opportunity to get an education at government expense. He may learn a trade or a business; and while he is learning, he draws his usual soldier's pay and his family allowances continue. He is thus encouraged to come back a skilled and able citizen and not a burden to himself or to society."

All communications in regard to civilian relief in DeKalb county should be sent to E. W. Atkinson, Auburn, Indiana.

Spencer township organization not reported.

The foregoing is a list of those who have in charge the united war work campaign—Nov. 11-15—in the county at large and locally. They plan a whirlwind campaign, the plan being to go "over the top" the first day.

The object of the campaign is meritorious and should enlist the support of every true American—to raise money for the seven organizations that are looking after the moral elevation and entertainment of the soldiers. They are the Young Men's Christian Association, Young Women's Christian Association, National Catholic War Council, Jewish Welfare Board, War Camp Service, American Library Association and Salvation Army. The work of these organizations has the hearty endorsement of President Wilson, Secretary of War Baker, General Pershing and all others who have been in a position to see what they are doing for the soldier boys; and, above all, it has the commendation of the boys themselves.

Everyone should contribute liberally to this great work. Don't give grudgingly nor sparingly, unleess you value a dollar more than the welfare of your boy or of your neighbor's boy.

Hard Nut to Crack

Here is a nut for school children to crack. There is no catch to it, either. It's a puzzle in English, and is as follows: There a simple sentence of only seven words that cannot be expresed in writing. It can be spoken, but not written. Can anyone give such a sentence? The answer need not be limited to seven words. More or fewer can be used.

Speaks For War Council.

Dr. Arthur J. Francis, representing the Red Cross War Council, will give a lecture in the Court Theatre Auburn, Ind., Monday evening, November 18, 1918. He will also use three reels of motion pictures, many taken in France and under fire, amid scenes Dr. Francis himself has seen. The address and display of pictures will furnish the Red Cross War Council, with one means of making its "report" to the people.

Dr. Faancis was formerly pastor of a great Chicago Church and tells the story in an inspiring way of what he himself has witnessed at the front, and in the Red Cross Hospitals and Canteens. The message will be valuable to the organization, and will be presented under the joint auspicies of DeKalb County Chapter and of the Lake Division and the National Headquarters of the American Red Cross.

There will be no admission charge and no contributions asked for. All will be guests of the American Red Cross.

Notice of Final Settlement

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN to all persons interested in the Estate of ANDREW BAKER deceased, to appear in the DeKalb Circuit Court, held at Auburn, Indiana, on the 16th. day of December 1918, and show cause if any, why my FINAL SETTLEMENT ACCOUNTS with the estate of said decedent should not be approved; and said heirs and all others interested, are notified to then and there make proof of heirship or claim and receive their distributive shares.

WITNESS, My name, this 1st. day of November, 1918.

FRED B. LEIGHTY.

Obituary

Willis Bishop, son of Willis and Mary Bishop, was born in Jackson Township, DeKalb County, Indiana, October 7, 1838. After spending almost his entire life in his native township, he passed away at his late home in Jackson Township, October 29, 1918, aged 80 years and 22 days.

In March 1861 he was united in in marriage to Analiza Carnahan, to this union was born two sons. He was seperated from his companion by death on October 31, 1865, and one son preceded him by death on March 24, 1913.

On April 5, 1868, he was united in marriage to Elizabeth Means, who has been his faithful companion for over fifty years To this union was born two daughters. He leaves to mourn his departure, his wife, one son, two daughters, three grandchildren, four great grandchildren and a large circle of friends and relatives, and in his death the home has lost a kind and loving husband and father, the community a highly esteemed citizen and neighbor, who was strictly honest in all his dealings with his fellow man.

When a young man he was converted and united with the M. E. church at the Perseverance Class at that time on the Auburn-Spencerville Circuit. After that appointment was abandoned he never identified himself with any church but always always encouraged right living. A few days before he died in conversion with his daughter, he expressed himself as ready to go and was only awaiting his Master's call.

Funeral services were conducted from the home on Friday morning, Rev. C. O Johnson of the St. Joe M. P. church officiating. Burial was made at Auburn Mausoleum.

Drugs!

The line of DRUGS, PATENT MEDICINES, etc., has been removed from Mr. Leighty's Store to my Room, where I will be in charge of the same. And will add to the line as fast as I find out the wants of the people of this district. Will be pleased to have you call when you need anything in the line of Medicines or Consultation.

OUR NAVY GUARDS COAST OF FRANCE

INTERESTING FACTS CONCERNING ITS ACTIVITIES, TOLD BY FRANKLIN ROOSEVELT.

MANY STATIONS ESTABLISHED

Million and a Quarter Tons of Coal Saved by Daylight Saving Law—National Movement Started for Reclaiming Waste Materials.

(From Committee on Public Information.)

Washington.—Franklin D. Roosevelt, assistant secretary of the navy, in a statement since his return from a tour of American naval bases and stations in Europe, described the work of the United States navy in the waters surrounding England, France, Italy, Greece and the Azores.

"Our operations on the British coast are fairly well known, but it probably is not generally realized that on the continent we have a large personnel on shore and have more stations in France than we have in all England," Secretary Roosevelt said.

"On the west coast of France we have a series of bases for the repair and upkeep of our escorting ships, destroyers, submarine chasers, etc. We have been using French facilities so far as possible, but in most cases we have had to erect complete plants so that those facilities are now more than double what they were before we went there.

"All the way from the Spanish border to the English channel we have established aviation stations so spaced that the entire coast line is covered by seaplanes and dirigibles. Nearly all these stations are situated at out-of-the-way points, some on uninhabited islands, others in fishing vessels on peninsulas. Labor was almost impossible to obtain, so these stations were built almost entirely by our own sailors. At each station there are from 200 to 300 men. This aviation force and our patrol vessels have been doing such splendid work that for the past six months there have been practically no sinkings within 50 miles of the French coast.

"At one point we have an immense assembly and repair base which employs more than 5,000 men. An instance of the way in which every bit of material has been utilized is found in connection with this base where, before the erection of the permanent quarters, the men took packing cases in which planes were shipped, and used them in building barracks which were very comfortable.

"In northern France, in co-operation with the British, the United States established what is known as the Northern Bombing Group. This was originally organized to bomb the German submarine bases on the Belgian coast. After the British had blockaded the entrance to those harbors, Germans were prevented from clearing the channel by the constant activity of these aviators who daily and nightly dropped tons of explosives on the submarine bases.

"We have a considerable naval force at Gibraltar. In conjunction with the British this force not only patrols the Atlantic in that vicinity, but also is active in the Mediterranean escorting vessels to and from Italy, Greece and Egypt. In the Adriatic we have established a large group of submarine chasers and other vessels at work. In conjunction with the Portuguese we have established a base in the Azores."

There appeared to be a misapprehension in this country as well as in France, Assistant Secretary Roosevelt said, as to the part taken by the American navy in transporting troops and supplies to French ports. Every transport that flies the United States flag is officered, manned and run by the American navy, he said. Much the larger portion of supplies for the army in France is taken across in American vessels officered and manned by the United States navy.

Nine enlisted men of the navy who volunteered to be inoculated with the serum of Spanish influenza to help medical officers gather specific facts regarding the disease and discover the means of combating it, have been commended by Secretary Daniels. The experiment was conducted during the prevalence of the epidemic in the first naval district, Boston, and the volunteers understood the danger to which they exposed themselves for the benefit of others.

The test indicated that the disease is not due to a filtrated virus, as the results were negative. None of the men inoculated contracted the disease. They were isolated for ten days after their inoculation.

As a measure against the further spread of influenza, war workers in Washington, D. C., are taken to their duty every morning by automobile instead of in crowded street cars. The division of transportation of the governmental emergency commission worked out the plan which, it is estimated, provides for the accommodation of 25,000 of these workers every day in privately owned automobiles that volunteer to "give a lift" to the men and women—especially the latter. The danger of traveling in crowded street cars is thus removed for them.

Contracts for motortrucks, chassis ambulances, tractors, passenger cars motorcycles and bicycles aggregating about $130,000,000, have been placed with various manufacturers by the motors and vehicles division of the motor transport corps. The orders cover 38,187 trucks and chassis of different sizes and types, and 3,584 ten-ton trailers and 150 four-wheel trailers. Orders for 150 four-wheel drives have been placed. Other orders include 18,000 passenger cars; 300 winter cars, 558 limousines, 3,000 delivery cars, 18,775 motorcycles, and 25,000 bicycles.

There have been purchased for the use of the army in October and November 47,000,000 pounds (239,796 barrels) of flour, 17,000,000 pounds of which is for domestic needs. The remainder is for the troops in France. The purchases were made by the subsistence division of the quartermaster corps.

More than 4,000,000 gallons of sirup have been bought for the troops overseas for use with their "hot cakes" as well as for sweetening their pastry. In addition to these supplies the subsistence division has bought more than 100,000,000 cans of salmon—enough for the army's requirements for a year. About 80 per cent of this lot will go to the forces in France. It is estimated that 16 ounces of salmon are equivalent to 20 ounces of beef. Concentration of the product makes it particularly desirable in both mobile and trench warfare.

Consumption of coal was reduced by a million and a quarter tons during the seven months' operation of the "daylight saving" law, according to figures compiled by the United States fuel administration. When the clocks were set ahead an hour, beginning Sunday, March 31, and ending October 27, the fuel administration planned to gather facts from many sources in various sections of the country to determine the saving in fuel likely to result from the operation of the law. These data have been compiled and form the basis of the estimate of the amount of coal saved.

In one district from which definite facts were obtained it was shown that the saving of coal was 17½ tons per 1,000 of population for the period of seven months. These figures were checked against records obtained from other places in different sections having the same relative conditions, and from the information thus collated the estimate of 1,250,000 tons saved is reached. The fuel administration says that the "daylight saving" plan in European countries has been effectual chiefly in the seven longer months.

A national system for the collection and disposal of materials which it is most desired to reclaim at this time, such as paper, cotton and woolen rags, steel, copper, brass, zinc, rubber, tin, leather, lead, tin foil, etc., has been organized and a working plan for every community, including towns with 5,000 population and outlying districts, as well as large metropolitan centers, has been formulated.

This system will be administered by the war prison labor and national waste reclamation section of the war industries board. It is expected that children will gather paper and rags and every family join in the movement and help their local reclamation council when it begins the work. With the organization of the local councils, through the war prison and national waste reclamation section, collection and disposal will be arranged for every household, apartment, department store, office building and city, state and federal institution.

Distribution of 20,000,000 food cards among American housewives will be made by the United States food administration on December 1, instead of October 27, as was originally planned. The spread of influenza and the consequent ban on all manner of public gatherings and activities, including patriotic work, prompted the postponement of the campaign.

The new card will contain no regulations regarding either "wheatless" or "meatless" days, but will urge as a whole the careful saving of all edibles, particularly wheat, meat, fats and sugar. It will be necessary for the United States to send 5,750,000 tons more of foodstuffs to the allies this year than last, with an almost staggering total of 17,500,000 tons in the coming year, in order that 120,000,000 people of these allied nations sitting at a "common table" with America may have stamina to bring the war to a conclusion if peace is not meantime obtained by Germany's surrender.

Destruction of rodents in Montana during the past season has saved $2,760,000 worth of crops at a cost of $82,800, according to a report issued by the department of agriculture. The work of ridding the farms of these pests was carried on in 25 counties. Two hundred and seventy-six tons of poisoned oats were used. Immense numbers of ground squirrels, prairie dogs, rats and mice were destroyed.

Nearly 400,000,000 feet of yellow pine lumber have been cut and transported by rail and water to shipyards on the Atlantic coast and the Gulf coast for the construction of wooden vessels under the direction of the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet corporation. With this amount of lumber, it is pointed out by the way of illustrating its immensity, the Atlantic ocean could be spanned from the American to the French shore—3,000 miles or more—with a bridge floor 25 feet wide and 1 inch thick, with about 4,000,000 feet to spare.

Seen and Heard In Indiana

Terre Haute.—The coal market has fallen for the first time since present maximum prices at the mines were fixed by the fuel administration. Indiana operators are cutting prices 15 to 25 cents a ton and 35 cents a ton on screenings, which is steam coal. Jobbers say prices are to go lower because some mines which have not yearly contracts to keep them in operation are out of orders which would keep the miners at work more than three days a week. On one Chicago coal road in the Indiana field it is said that several hundred empty cars were at mine switches waiting for the mines to hoist coal. For several weeks with the Indiana production running about 650,000 tons a week it was foreseen that the markets in the zone open for Indiana coal would be more than supplied unless far greater storing were done, especially by the industries. The storage of domestic coal has been estimated at about 60 per cent of all that will be used through an average winter.

Lafayette.—"There will be no shortage of seed corn in Indiana next spring as there was last, judging from the amount of seed corn gathered and stored properly this fall," declared C. Henry of Purdue university, state leader of the fall selection campaign. "Reports from nearly all the counties show that a great majority of the farmers went into the fields before corn cutting and selected the best samples for seed purposes. Those who practiced field selection in most cases stored it properly, so that it is dry enough that freezing weather will not hurt it. Advices from some counties show that 90 per cent of the farmers have their seed corn gathered, while a number of others indicate that 75 per cent or more have their seed selected and stored.

Indianapolis.—News has been received in Indianapolis that the interstate commerce commission has granted permission to the Union Traction Company of Indiana to increase its freight rates not to exceed 25 per cent, nor in excess of existing rates on competing steam carriers, to apply between points on its lines and connecting lines in Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Michigan and Ohio. The company now operates in intrastate business in Indiana under the recent rate order of the public service commission, which reclassified interurban freight business to place it more nearly on a basis where certain types of freight business would go to the interurbans and the heavier types to the steam carriers.

Shelbyville.—As a result of a war in this city between potato dealers, which has been carried on for several weeks, potatoes recently were retailed at $1.30 a bushel on the cash-and-carry plan. When the controversy began the price for a bushel was $2.25. Outside dealers began shipping in potatoes and cutting the price, and later local dealers shipped in the tubers in car lots, all of which were sold at the low price. The same course was run on the apple market. The New York apples and Baldwins were offered at $1.40 and $1.50 a bushel.

Jeffersonville.—The National Fiber Reed company, which has a contract to buy the output of the chair trade school at the Indiana reformatory here, is moving its main office to Cincinnati, where it is establishing a factory, and all furniture stored has been shipped there. Chairs will still be made at the reformatory and will be shipped direct to Cincinnati. The trade school is now using more than 100 men and is busier than at any time since a fire last February, which originated in one of the chair shops.

Indianapolis.—The 1919 license tags for automobiles and motorcycles will show white letters and figures on a black background, it was learned at the secretary of state's office. The tags now show black letters on a green background. The new tags will be made at the state prison under a contract awarded some time ago. Application blanks for the 1919 license are ready for distribution from the state office.

Indianapolis.—The fourth Liberty loan quota of the 68 counties in the Seventh federal reserve district has been cleared to the federal reserve bank in Chicago. The quota was $108,750,000. The state is now officially over, as the 24 southern counties in the Eighth federal reserve district had previously cleared their allotment to the bank in St. Louis.

Bluffton.—In order to make the task a real one for a band of efficient workers, the city of Bluffton has voluntarily increased its apportionment of the county's quota in the war work campaign to $10,000. The apportionment of the county is $42,000. A staff of 30 speakers has been selected to tour the county and prepare the way for the drive.

Evansville.—Some new corn has reached the local market, although not in large quantities. It is quoted at $1 a bushel, old corn selling at $1.80. The quality of the new corn is said to be good, but the crop in Vanderburg county as a whole is about 85 per cent, which is about the same as that of last year. The difficulty in getting corn shucked will reduce the yield considerably.

Terre Haute.—Production of Indiana coal mines ended October 26 was 643,889 tons, according to reports to the district representatives of the fuel administration.

Indianapolis.—Warning that every precaution should still be taken to prevent the spreading of influenza and pneumonia was issued by Dr. Herman G. Morgan, secretary of the city board of health. The ban on public gatherings and other restrictions designed to prevent an epidemic was lifted, but health officials pointed out that great care must be exercised to prevent a marked recurrence of the disease. The toll of the influenza-pneumonia epidemic among the civilian population of Indianapolis and in the army camp in and near the city since September 26, when the first cases developed, is 578 deaths and a total of 10,008 cases. In Indianapolis there have been 350 deaths and 6,129 cases. At Ft. Benjamin Harrison, there have been 181 deaths and 3,089 cases. At the vocational training detachments there have been forty-five deaths and 737 cases. Among the men of the aviation training depot at the speedway there have been two deaths and 18 cases and at the Butler college student army training school there were 35 cases and no deaths. The state board of health has received reports to date of 1,336 deaths and 54,123 cases of influenza or pneumonia. These figures do not include the reports to the Indianapolis board of health, nor of cases and deaths in army camps in the state. They also are admittedly incomplete for the state outside Indianapolis and the army camps. But, putting together the figures available on the epidemic in the state, they show that Indiana has had 1,914 deaths and 64,131 cases, officially reported, since the epidemic began.

Indianapolis.—It costs twice as much to ship 100 pounds of bread 50 miles in Indiana as it does in Illinois. The Illinois rate for that distance and that amount is 15 cents, and the Indiana, or official classification, rate is 30½ cents. With the distance increased to 100 miles, the Illinois rate is 19½ cents and the Indiana 37½ cents. To ship 100 pounds of sugar 100 miles in Indiana costs 23 cents, while in Illinois it costs 15 cents. The freight rate of meat shipped in crates 100 miles is 19 cents per 100 pounds in Illinois, and 29 cents in Indiana. For 200 miles the Indiana rate for such shipments is 39 cents, while the Illinois is 24½ cents. These are a few examples of the discrimination in rates against which the Indiana public service commission has appealed and which will be heard by a subcommittee of the United States railroad administration at Chicago, November 7.

Muncie.—Committees from several Indiana towns and cities, which have been supplied with natural and artificial gas by the Central Indiana Gas company, have been appointed by John McPhee, city attorney of Muncie, acting as the chairman of a temporary association of several Indiana municipalities, for the purpose of investigating the truth of the company's claims relative to a failing natural gas supply, the supposed necessity for an increase in its rates for artificial gas. The committees will visit the West Virginia natural gas fields from which Indiana draws its natural gas supply. The action follows a petition of the Central Indiana company before the Indiana public service commission at Indianapolis for an increase in rates in 12 cities and towns of the state.

Indianapolis.—Maj. Robert C. Baltzell, state conscription agent, has received a message from the provost marshal general at Washington authorizing him to announce that "in post offices of the first and second classes, postmasters may file with local exemption boards affidavits for the purpose of securing deferred classification (Class 3) for supervising officers in post offices, post office clerks and city letter carriers, whose services cannot be dispensed with without materially lowering the efficiency of service; drivers of government owned automobiles, mechanics and skilled laborers whose services are absolutely necessary, and clerks and substitute clerks employed at military branches."

Evansville.—Twenty-four southern Indiana counties, which are included in the Eighth federal reserve district, subscribed more than $20,000,000 in the fourth Liberty loan campaign and have a percentage of 107, according to final reports received by Marcus S. Sonntag of this city, chairman of the Hoosier units. The other 68 Indiana counties are in the Seventh Federal reserve district.

Indianapolis.—Horace Ellis, state superintendent of public instruction, has announced that it is proposed virtually to do away with all holidays and vacations for the remainder of th school year, except Thanksgiving day and Christmas day, in order to make up time lost by the enforced closing of schools because of the influenza-pneumonia epidemic.

Terre Haute.—Production of coal by Indiana mines for the week ending October 19 was 666,665 tons as against 692,228 tons for the preceding week, which was a record-breaking week, according to reports issued here at the headquarters of the Indiana Bituminous Coal Operators' association.

Petersburg.—Corn of the 1918 crop in Pike county now is being harvested. Grain dealers in the local market are paying from $1 to $1.25 a bushel for it, according to the grade. The crop is the largest ever raised in this region and enough corn has already matured and been gathered to insure Pike county plenty of seed corn for 1919. Pike and Shelby counties are the first in Indiana to report that they have begun the harvesting of the 1918 crop of corn. Reference to past years indicates that the gathering of the grain is beginning about a week earlier this year than usual.

The-Man-In-The Street

By THOMAS ADDISON
of The Vigilantes

"I like the stuff you fellows are getting out. It's bang up. But how about the Man-in-the-Street? Aren't you shooting over his head?"

The speaker was referring to the Vigilantes. He was a bit smug, perhaps—what you might term, in the social sense, classified—but at that a good, earnest, aggressive American. I answered his question with another.

"Do you mean yourself or me? We are here in the street, well met, and talking."

He laughed comfortably.

"Oh, pshaw! You know whom I mean. The man on the street corner. The chap who isn't posted; who only reads the headlines; doesn't think beyond them."

"I don't get you," I replied. "If you mean the 1914 corner loafer there are precious few of them left. Work or fight has sounded the knell of the species. But perhaps you mean the workingman, the digger of ditches, the mechanic, the street sweeper, that policeman over there; or, in a generic way, the shop girl, washerwoman, janitor, ashman, charwoman; in short, the everlasting proletariat. What?"

"Well, if you put it that way, yes," he confessed. "You've got to use primer English, primer facts, primer sentiment if you want to reach that class. You Vigilantes fly too high for them—'Get Into the Attitude of the War,' 'The Body or the Soul,' 'Pro-Patria,' things like that. First rate, all of them, to the thoughtful man; but how about Bill Jones, Kittie Curlicue, Sarah Scrubbs, Izzy Einstein and that sort? They don't see your stuff, it isn't likely, but if they do—eh? Think they sense it?"

Man With Dinner Pail Knew.

"If they don't—though I'm not conceding it, mind you—then for their benefit you'd have us treat the great moral issues of the war in vaudeville vein: Snappy stuff, slapstick argument, give and take, with a grand hurrah for the finish. Is it that you are driving at?"

"Oh, come. You know what—"

But I stopped him. A man with a dinner pail swinging from a gnarled and dingy hand was plodding toward us, an oldish man. An evening newspaper was stuck in his pocket.

I made a rapid proposition to my friend.

"Here's one of these Men-in-the-Street now. Bet you the cigars he feels the war, in his own way, as much as either of us, and I don't [illegible] from Adam. Done?"

"Done!"

I hailed the man as he came up.

"Neighbor, we are having a dispute, my friend and I, about the war. The question is, do the people at large see anything in it beyond the mere grapple to the death of opposing armies, or do they realize the vital issues at stake? I mean by that the spiritual issues, the things you can't measure with your eye or weigh in your hand, and yet are as the breath of life to all above the brute beasts of the fields. What do you say?"

I saw a secret smile curve my friend's lips. Here I was talking, as I wrote, over the head of the Man-in-the-Street. But the tired, worn face suddenly had become keenly alive. He looked from one to the other of us with what seemed almost a pitying glance.

"I have two boys in this war, in France now," he said simply.

"Yes," I encouraged.

"Well," he went on, "if I thought they was fightin' just to lick them Huns—nothin' but that—I'd curse the day they was born. But it's what the Huns represent they's fightin' against an' we all know what that is—to crush into one mold of their own makin' the free peoples of the earth, to make 'em slaves to a murderin' ambition to glorify a state and not the souls of the millions on which it rests.

It Is Easy to Understand.

"Do you think it takes a college man to reason this thing out, mister? Well, it don't. Who's behind this war? Who's goin' to put it through? The statesman? The millionaires? The gentlemen an' scholars? No, sir! It's what them fellers there in Washington call the Plain People. That's me an my boys, an' a long, long line like us. We've got to do the heft of the fightin' an' we're in it with our minds, an hearts, an' souls wide open. Maybe we can't express ourselves—just how we feel—but there's them that can do it for us, an' we read what they say, an' talk it over in the shops an' in our homes. An' we think on it, an'—an'—sorter grow inside, as you might say."

The man was silent a thoughtful moment. Then he said:

"Maybe that's not the answer you're lookin' for, mister, but it's the best I can make you. We know the horror of this war, but there's more'n that in it. There's beauty in it—for if there's anything more beautiful, more—what I read somewhere—'splendidly sublime,' that a boy—mine, yours, anybody's—offerin' up his dear young life that the spirit of liberty may be preserved in the world, God hasn't given me the grace to see it."

He smiled mistily, but his head was high, and his step now as the march of soldiers as he went his way. I turned to my friend.

"Well?" I remarked.

"I lose, and gladly," he admitted.

The busy enemy-alien propagandist is having a hard row to hoe these days. So many of his plans have slipped up and so many of him are filling the concentration camps. Uncle Sam is very quiet about it, but he has a keen eye and a long arm. Quite unexpectedly, out of the blue, the poor spy feels a heavy hand on his collar, and his usual haunts know him no more. In his confinement behind the bars, or while he is harvesting the corn for better men to eat, he hasn't the satisfaction of gloating over his misdeeds. Too many of them have failed.

With that boasted German efficiency of which we once heard so much the propagandist tackled the American negro. Here were a people ready to his hand, simple, kindly, unsuspicious, with so many grievances against the government that it would be easy to incite them to riot and disorder, thereby seriously hampering war work.

They tried it. They tried it again. They took another angle and tried it. Gott in himmel! These people were loyal! They might complain among themselves, or to the powers that be, against their wrongs and oppressions, but America was their home, and the Stars and Stripes their flag, and God help the person who dared suggest that they act as traitors to either!

Hun Bee Gets Busy.

Then the busy little bee began another flight, and worked up feeling among the ignorant whites against the negro. Here he was more successful, as the riots in St. Louis proved. But they drew the attention of thoughtful people and it was asked: "Why, if the negro were at fault were there more colored men killed than white?" If, as propagandists were shouting, the colored people were a "problem" and a "menace to civilization," how came it that the troubles were invariably started by white men attacking blacks? The German propagandists discovered to their dismay that their tactics were having the effect of drawing general attention to the wrongs of the negro and arousing interest and sympathy for him on all sides. The mute protest of the colored women and children, all in black, marching down Fifth avenue, with no bands, no orators, no disturbances, simply carrying banners appealing for protection and justice, created a deep and lasting impression.

Finally, in a sort of desperation, the Germans spread the lies far and wide that negro soldiers were being sacrificed at the front; they were put in the most dangerous places, and when wounded were left to suffer and die unattended on the battlefield. Here again the boomerang turned and hit the conspirators. If they hadn't started the treacherous propaganda the American public would not have heard General Pershing's opinion of the colored troops. After denying the truth of "the stories, probably invented by German agents," he adds: "I cannot commend too highly the spirit shown among the colored combat troops, who exhibit fine capacity for quick training and eagerness for the most dangerous work."

Proud of Colored Troops.

The head of the Red Cross came forward to testify that the same care and attention was given by the society to the colored men as to the white.

Returning travelers and soldiers add a few details. They say the negro troops are tremendously popular in all the French villages where they are billeted, that their smart appearance—every puttee polished, every button shining—their unfailing good humor—their glorious bands and mellow singing voices, and above all, the high spirits and eagerness for the fight that they are bringing to war-weary France is arousing enthusiasm wherever they go.

"Complaining that they are given dangerous jobs?" The officers commanding colored troops report that the only complaints their men make are against being held back. They beg for the first line; they glory in the danger.

Thank you, Mr. German Propagandist, you have helped the people all over this country, East and West, North and South, to realize that our negro troops are men to be proud of; loyal Americans every one of them!

"Working again? "Why not? I'm well and strong."
"But—your two boys?" She showed her service pin:
Two stars. Her neighbor frowned.
You think it's wrong
For both to go? But listen—don't begin
To blame them till you know . . .
One was to stay with me. "It's up to you,
Mother, to choose," they said. And shining through
Their faces, I could see their spirits glow . . .
I loved—and understood. What could I do
But bless them both—my boys!—and bid them go?

CAROLYN LEARNS WHY HER UNCLE AND AMANDA PARLOW DO NOT SPEAK AS THEY PASS.

Synopsis.—Her father and mother reported lost at sea when the Dunraven, on which they had sailed for Europe, was sunk, Carolyn May Cameron—Hannah's Carolyn—is sent from New York to her bachelor uncle, Joseph Stagg, at the Corners. The reception given her by her uncle is not very enthusiastic. Carolyn is also chilled by the stern demeanor of Aunty Rose, Uncle Joe's housekeeper. Stagg is dismayed when he learns from a lawyer friend of his brother-in-law that Carolyn has been left practically penniless and consigned to his care as guardian.

"So?" said the carpenter, pushing his big spectacles up to his forehead. "I read about it. Too bad—too mighty bad! I remember Hannah Stagg," he added, winking his eyes, Carolyn May thought, a good deal as Prince did. "You look like her."

"Do I?" Carolyn May returned, drawing nearer. "I'm glad I do. And I'm glad I sleep in what used to be her bed, too. It doesn't seem so lonesome."

"So? I reckoned you'd be lonesome up there at The Corners," said the carpenter.

Mr. Parlow stripped another shaving from the edge of the board he was plumbing. Carolyn May's eager eyes followed that curling ribbon and her lips parted.

The carpenter paused before pushing the plane a second time the length of the board. "Don't you want a drink of water, little girl?" he asked.

"Oh, yes, sir—I would. And I know Prince would like a drink," she told him quickly.

"Go right around to the well in the back yard," said Mr. Parlow. "You'll find a glass there—and Mandy keeps a pan on the well curb for the dogs and cats."

"Thank you, I'll go," the little girl said.

She hoped she would see Miss Amanda Parlow, but she saw nobody.

She went back to the door of the carpenter shop and found Mr. Parlow still busily at work.

"Seems to me," he said, in his dry voice, after a little while, "you aren't much like other little girls."

"Aren't I?" responded Carolyn May wonderingly.

"No. Most little girls that come here want shavings to play with," said the carpenter, quizzically eying her over his work.

"Oh!" cried Carolyn May, almost jumping. "And do you give 'em to 'em?"

"'Most always," admitted Mr. Parlow.

"Oh! Can I have some?" she gasped.

"All you want," said Mr. Parlow.

When Tim's old hack crawled along the road from town with Aunty Rose sitting inside, enthroned amidst a multitude of bundles, Carolyn May was bedecked with a veritable wig of long, crisp curls.

"Well, child, you certainly have made a mess of yourself," said the housekeeper. "Has she been annoying you, Jedidiah Parlow?"

"She's the only Stagg that ain't annoyed me since her mother went away," said the carpenter gruffly.

Aunty Rose looked at him levelly. "I wonder," she said. "But, you see, she isn't wholly a Stagg."

This, of course, did not explain matters to Carolyn May in the least. Nor did what Aunty Rose said to her on the way home in the hot, stuffy hack help the little girl to understand the trouble between her uncle and Mr. Parlow.

"Better not let Joseph Stagg see you so friendly with Jedidiah Parlow. Let sleeping dogs lie," Mrs. Kennedy observed.

CHAPTER V.

A Tragic Situation.

Such was the introduction of Carolyn May to The Corners. It was not a very exciting life she had entered into, but the following two or three weeks were very full.

Aunty Rose insisted upon her being properly fitted out with clothing for the summer and fall. Carolyn May had to go to the dressmaker's house to be fitted and that is how she became acquainted with Chet Gormley's mother.

Mrs. Gormley was helping the dressmaker and they both made much of Carolyn May. Aunty Rose allowed her to go for her fitting alone—of course with Prince as a companion—so, without doubt, Mrs. Gormley, who loved a "dish of gossip," talked more freely with the little girl than she would have done in Mrs. Kennedy's presence.

One afternoon the little girl appeared at the dressmaker's with Prince's collar decorated with short, curly shavings.

"I take it you've stopped at Jed Parlow's shop, child," said Mrs. Gormley with a sigh.

"Yes, ma'am," returned Carolyn May. "Do you know, he's very lib'ral."

"'Lib'ral?' repeated Mrs. Gormley. "I never heard of old Jed Parlow bein' accused of that before. Did you, Mrs. Maine?"

Mrs. Maine was the dressmaker; and she bit off her words when she spoke, much as she bit off her threads.

"No. I never—heard Jed Parlow—called that—no!" declared Mrs. Maine emphatically.

"Why, yes," little Carolyn May said quite eagerly, "he gives me all the shavings I want. I—I guess folks don't just understand about Mr. Parlow," she added, remembering what her uncle had first said about the carpenter. "He is real lib'ral."

"It's a wonder to me," drawled Mrs. Gormley, "that he has a thing to do with a certain party, Mrs. Maine, considerin' how his daughter feels toward that certain party's relation. What d'you think?"

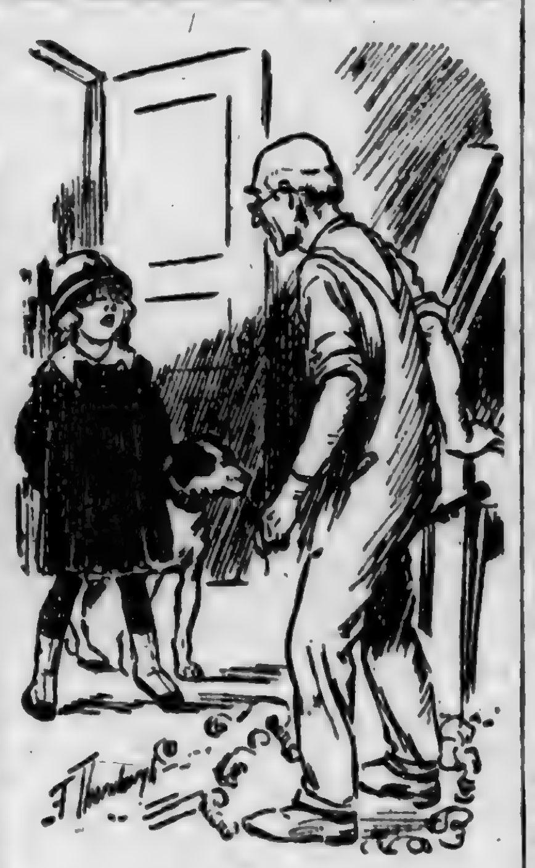
"I guess—there's sumpin—to be said—on both sides o' that controversy," responded the dressmaker.

"Meanin' that mebbe a certain party's relative feels just as cross as Mandy Parlow?" suggested Mrs. Gormley.

"Yep," agreed the other woman.

Carolyn May listened, much puzzled. She wondered just who "a certain party" could be.

Mrs. Maine was called away upon some household task and Mrs. Gormley seemed to change the subject of conversation.



"I Reckoned You'd Be Lonesome Up There at the Corners," said the Carpenter.

"Don't your uncle, Mr. Stagg, ever speak to you about Mandy Parlow?" she asked the little girl.

Carolyn May had to think about this before answering. Then she remembered.

"Oh, yes," she said brightly.

"He does? Do tell!" exclaimed Mrs. Gormley eagerly. "What does he say?"

"Why, he says her name is Miss Amanda Parlow."

Mrs. Gormley flushed rather oddly and glanced at the child with suspicion. But little Carolyn May was perfectly frank and ingenuous.

"Humph!" ejaculated Chet's mother. "He never says nothing about bein' in love with Mandy, does he? They was goin' with each other steady once."

The little girl looked puzzled.

"'When folks love each other they look at each other and talk to each other, don't they?" she asked.

"Well—yes—generally," admitted Mrs. Gormley.

"Then my Uncle Joe and Miss Amanda Parlow aren't in love," announced Carolyn May with confidence, "for they don't even look at each other."

"They used to. Why, Joseph Stagg and Mandy Parlow was sweethearts years and years ago! Long before your mother left these parts, child."

"That was a long time 'fore I was borned," said the little girl wonderingly.

"Oh, yes. Everybody that went to The Corners' church thought they'd be married."

"My Uncle Joe and Miss Mandy?"

"Yes."

"Then, what would have become of Aunty Rose?" queried Carolyn May.

"Oh, Mrs. Kennedy hadn't gone to keep house for Mr. Stagg then," replied Mrs. Gormley. "He tried sev'ral triflin' critters there at the Stagg place before she took hold."

Carolyn May looked at Mrs. Gormley encouragingly. She was very much interested in Uncle Joe and Miss Amanda Parlow's love affair.

"Why didn't they get married—like my papa and mamma?" she asked.

"Oh, goodness knows!" exclaimed Mrs. Gormley. "Some says 'twas his fault and some says 'twas hern. And mebbee 'twas a third party's that I might mention at that," added Mrs. Gormley, pursing up her lips in a very knowing way.

"One day," she said, growing confidential, "it was in camp-meeting time—one day somebody seen Joe Stagg drivin' out with another girl—Charlotte Lenny, that was. She was married to a man over in Springdale long ago. Mr. Stagg took Charlotte to Faith camp meeting.

"Then, the very next week, Mandy went with Evan Peckham to a barn dance at Crockett's, and nobody ain't ever seen your uncle and Mandy Parlow speak since, much less ever walk together."

One particularly muddy day Prince met the returning hardware merchant at the gate with vociferous barkings and a plain desire to implant a welcoming tongue on the man's cheek. He succeeded in muddying Mr. Stagg's suit with his front paws, and almost cast the angry man full length into a mud puddle.

"Drat the beast!" ejaculated Mr. Stagg. "I'd rather have an epileptic fit loose around here than him. Now, look at these clo'es! I declare, Car'lyn, you've jest got to tie that mongrel up—and keep him tied!"

"All the time, Uncle Joe?" whispered the little girl.

"Yes, ma'am, all the time! If I find him loose again, I'll tie a bag of rocks to his neck and drop him in the deepest hole in the brook."

After this awful threat Prince lived a precarious existence, and his mistress was much worried for him. Aunty Rose said nothing, but she saw that both the little girl and her canine friend were very unhappy.

Mrs. Kennedy, however, had watched Mr. Joseph Stagg for years. Indeed, she had known him as a boy, long before she had closed up her own little cottage around on the other road and come to the Stagg place to save the hardware merchant from the continued reign of those "trifling creatures" of whom Mrs. Gormley had spoken.

As a bachelor Joseph Stagg had been preyed upon by certain female harpies so prevalent in a country community. Some had families whom they partly supported out of Mr. Stagg's larder; some were widows who looked upon the well-to-do merchant as a marrying proposition.

Aunty Rose Kennedy did not need the position of Mr. Stagg's housekeeper and could not be accused of assuming it from mercenary motives. Over her back fence she had seen the havoc going on in the Stagg homestead after Hannah Stagg went to the city and Joseph Stagg's final female relative had died and left him alone in the big house.

One day the old Quaker-like woman could stand no more. She put on her sunbonnet, came around by the road to the front door of the Stagg house, which she found open, and walked through to the rear porch on which the woman who then held the situation of housekeeper was wrapping up the best feather bed and pillows in a pair of the best homespun sheets, preparatory to their removal.

The neighbors enjoyed what followed. Aunty Rose came through the ordeal as dignified and unruffled as ever; the retiring incumbent went away wrathfully, shaking the dust of the premises from her garments as a testimony against "any sich actions."

When Mr. Stagg came home at supper time he found Aunty Rose at the helm and already a different air about the place.

"Goodness me, Aunty Rose," he said, biting into her biscuit ravenously, "I was a-going down to the millhands' hotel to board. I couldn't stand it no longer. If you'd stay here and do for me, I'd feel like a new man."

"You ought to be made over into a new man, Joseph Stagg," the woman said sternly. "A married man."

"No, no! Never that!" gasped the hardware dealer.

"If I came here, Joseph Stagg, it would cost you more money than you've been paying these no-account women."

"I don't care," said Mr. Stagg recklessly. "Go ahead. Do what you please. Say what you want. I'm game."

Thereby he had put himself into Aunty Rose's power. She had renovated the old kitchen and some of the other rooms. If Mr. Stagg at first trembled for his bank balance, he was made so comfortable that he had not the heart to murmur.

Of course, Carolyn May let Prince run at large when she was sure Uncle Joe was well out of sight of the house, but she was very careful to chain him up again long before her uncle was expected to return.

Prince had learned not to chase anything that wore feathers; Aunty Rose herself had to admit that he was a very intelligent dog and knew what punishment was for. But how did he know that in trying to dig out a mole he would be doing more harm than good?

Carolyn is heartbroken and decides upon drastic action when Uncle Joe passes sentence on Prince. Read about it in the next installment.

IMPORTANCE OF FARMER IN WAR

Food-Production Problems Are Growing More Acute With Progress of Conflict.

MORE MEN CALLED TO ARMY

Department of Agriculture Officials Assured From Every Section That Man Behind the Plow Will Not Fail in War Task.

The man behind the plow, department of agriculture officials believe, is the man behind the man behind the gun, and the idea has been embodied in a striking poster that is soon to be used throughout the country in hammering home the importance of the American farmer's big war job.

Edward Penfield, poster artist of New York, painted the picture, which shows a plowman working in the furrows to produce food for the men in the trenches. Against a sunlit background are seen the silhouetted figures of soldiers in battle.

Farmers Not to Fail.

Food production problems are described as growing more acute with the progress of the war, the increasing demands for food, the calling of more men to the army, and other results of America straining every nerve toward one objective. But department of agriculture officials are assured in every mail and from every section of the country that the farmers are not going to fail in their war task. Farmers have gone over the top for the period of the war. The new poster is intended to impress upon people of the cities and towns the great importance of accommodating agriculture in its requirements of labor, finance and marketing.

Farmer's Place Recognized.

The importance of the farmer in the organization of American resources to win the war was expressed by the secretary of agriculture in his recent appeal "to the patriots on the farms" to go "over the top" this fall for a great harvest of wheat in 1919. In this appeal the secretary said:

"You have occupied and do occupy the first line trenches of the food army. You have to fight difficulties, too. I am not unmindful of these. In the department of agriculture we consider them daily, and daily we give our best efforts to help you meet them. You know of the difficulties in your community, but I know of them in many communities of many states, and so seriously do they impress me that I might almost consider them insurmountable had not American farmers last year, and again this year, revealed the true American fighting spirit and ability to meet serious situations.

"Let us sow liberally for a big harvest in 1919. It has been called the Liberty wheat harvest. We all hope it will be. But let us undertake the task with the determination that we will sweat our blood for many more if need be before we yield one measure of our freedom to a Prussian domination. Let us fight in the furrows."

Use Farm Woodlands Wisely.

Farm woodlands are being drawn upon for large quantities of timber for war purposes. There is a big demand for logs of black walnut, white oak, hickory, spruce, black locust, yellow birch, yellow poplar, rock elm, ash, white cedar (in the southern states), and also for the bark of chestnut, oak and hemlock if near tannin-extract factories. Large, sound trees of these species should be cut and marketed for war purposes, and under no consideration used for cordwood except as their tops and branches may be utilized for this purpose.

Farm woodlands are also furnishing perhaps double the ordinary amount of wood for fuel. This increased demand may result in considerable and lasting damage to the woodlands unless precautions are taken. On the other hand, the cutting of cordwood affords each owner of woodland an opportunity to clear his land and put his timber in better condition. To accomplish this the idea to keep in mind is to remove for cordwood the poorer, less valuable trees, leaving the better ones to stand. In removing the fuel wood the greatest precaution should be taken not to injure the more valuable trees or the young growth.

Briefly, the material which should be removed is as follows:

Sound sticks lying on the ground, including tops left in logging operations, and trees blown over by wind, crushed down by snow or otherwise toppled over; dead trees which are sound and still standing; trees which are diseased, or are so seriously injured by insects that they will probably die, and also trees which are specially subject to serious disease or insect attack; crooked trees which are crowding out straight ones; large old trees unsuitable for lumber, and having big tops which shade out numerous smaller trees growing beneath them, small trees which are overtopped and stunted by larger and better ones, trees of the less valuable kind which are crowding good trees of the more valuable kinds, trees which by some chance are growing on ground unsuited to them; slowly growing trees which are crowding out equally valuable kinds that grow faster; trees badly fire-scarred at the butt, which usually become rotten and are among the first to be blown over by heavy winds.

The ideal trees for cordwood are those which range from four to about ten inches in diameter. The yield of cordwood from trees smaller than four inches in diameter is very slight, and trees larger than ten inches in diameter are usually more valuable for some other purpose, unless they are defective.

GROW WINTER GREENS

In the milder portions of the country it is possible by the aid of a cold frame to grow lettuce, radishes, spinach, kale and parsley throughout the winter. The cold frame may be any size from three feet by six—this being the size of the standard cold frame sash—to six feet by any multiple of three feet. A four-sash frame—that is one six by twelve feet—would be large enough to supply the average family with winter greens.

Time to Overhaul Machinery.

The proper time for overhauling farming machines is during their period of inactivity and before the rush of spring work. If put off until needed, delay incident to getting repair parts promptly, press of other work, and the hazy recollection of the past season's difficulties may hinder the efficient prosecution of this work.

At the end of the season's work, it is a plan well worth while to make out a schedule of needed repairs and adjustments for a particular machine and file it in a convenient place, so when opportunity arises the work may be taken up and prosecuted expeditiously. The machine itself represents capital invested. It should be housed properly and not left in a fence corner or other out-of-the-way place for wooden parts to rot and metal parts to rust, which, even for short periods, may cause more deterioration than the season's use.

Food Instead of Flowers.

A Virginia florist, according to the report of the home demonstration agent, planted tomatoes this year instead of flowers, so that he could help the food situation. He made arrangements through the home demonstration agent with one of the club girls to can the tomatoes on shares for the market.

"He also wants someone to make pickles for market on shares," says the report of the agent.

LESSON FOR NOVEMBER 10

JACOB DECEIVES HIS FATHER.

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 27:18-29.

GOLDEN TEXT—Speak every man truth with his neighbor.—Ephesians 4:25.

DEVOTIONAL READING—Ephesians 4:25-32.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL—Genesis 27:1-45; Proverbs 12:17-20; Zechariah 8:16-17; Acts 5:1-11.

I. Isaac's Purpose Regarding the Birthright (27:1-4).

The infirmity of old age reminded Isaac that he should set his house in order. The particular matter needing attention was the determination as to who should be the head of the house when he was gone. As to whether Isaac knew what God had told Rebekah concerning Jacob's priority we are not told (Gen. 25:23), but it is evident that he lacked spiritual discernment, being under the sway of his appetite. Even though he was ignorant of God's plan as revealed to Rebekah, Esau's action in marrying heathen women (Gen. 26; 34, 35), ought to have convinced Isaac that Esau was unfit to be the head of the house which was in line of the covenant blessing.

II. Rebekah's Scheme to Frustrate Isaac's Plan (vv. 5-17).

Having heard Isaac's instructions to Esau, she took steps to divert the father's blessing from Esau to Jacob. She knew it was God's will that Jacob should have the birthright, but had no scruples as to what method should be used in its accomplishment.

1. Rebekah's instructions to Jacob (vv. 5-10).

She sent Jacob to bring two kids from the goats, promising that she would make savory meat, such as Isaac loved. She knew that Isaac's weak spot was his stomach.

2. Jacob's hesitancy (vv. 11-17).

He foresaw the difficulty and danger which confronted him. His hesitancy was not because he had conscientious scruples against doing the deed, but was afraid of being found out. Some have a desire to do evil, but refrain from it because they are afraid of being caught. Rebekah undertakes to bear the curse that may come, so Jacob's scruples are set aside. She clothes him with Esau's raiment, and places into his hands the food.

III. Jacob Deceives Esau (vv. 18-29).

1. Interview between Isaac and Jacob (vv. 18-25).

The quickness with which the savory meat was brought, aroused suspicion in the mind of Isaac. In order to allay that suspicion Jacob deliberately lied. He not only lied, but blasphemed the name of God in declaring that his success was due to the help of Jehovah. This lie is again repeated when Isaac questions him further. One lie calls for another. Having started on the road of deception he was obliged to lie in order to cover up his deceit.

2. The paternal blessing (vv. 26-29).

It embodied the following particulars: (1) A fertile soil and abundant products (v. 28). Man is dependent upon God for the fruitage of the soil. Few stop to consider their obligation to him for temporal blessings. (2) National pre-eminence (v. 29). God was to give him a numerous and powerful offspring. This has in a large measure been fulfilled, but in a still larger measure it remains to be fulfilled. (3) Pre-eminence among his kindred (v. 29). "The elder shall serve the younger." (4) The object of God's especial care (v. 29). Being God's choice, God obligates himself to care for him. Those who would misuse Jacob would suffer; those who would favor Jacob would be favored. Those who are chosen of God enjoy his special care, and woe be to him who would dare to molest them. This included temporal and spiritual blessings. Happy is he who enjoys the friendship of God.

IV. Esau's Remorse (vv. 30-38).

Scarcely had Isaac ceased blessing Jacob till Esau came for the blessing. The secret was now out. Lying and deceit cannot long be hid. In the face of what had been done, Isaac shakes with fear. No doubt this is due to the manifest presence of Jehovah. Esau gives forth a terrible wail. While shedding bitter tears of disappointment, he rages with passion and plans to murder Jacob after Isaac's death. This is a most bitter experience for Esau, but he is merely reaping what he sowed. For a brief indulgence of his flesh he sold his birthright. May Esau's folly warn us of choosing fleshly indulgence rather than spiritual blessings. Whenever one turns from the love of God to the gratification of worldly lusts, he is guilty of Esau's profanity.

Election at St. Joe

At the election in Concord township on Tuesday, the Republicans were victorious, electing everything but constable. Following are the successful candidates and the positions to which they were elected:

Trustee.—F. R. Bowman.
Assessor.—O. K. Shull.
Justice of the Peace.—J. C. Bailey.
Constable.—James H. Harter.
Advisory Board.—Martin D. Engle, Amos Gamble and B. E. Widney.

In the county, the Republicans nearly made a clean sweep, Frank Baltz, for sheriff, being the only successful Democratic candidate.

Fairfield was re-elected to congress from the Twelfth Indiana district.

Ross Abel (Rep.) was elected trustee of Newville township, and P. A. Walker (Dem.) of Spencer In the latter township, W. Renn was elected justice of the peace.

In Wilmington township, A. D. Brunson was elected trustee; and Jackson chose the first Republican trustee for years, the successful candidate being Lewis Howey.

Excellent Home-Made Cough Medicine

You Don't Find Glando Pine the Best Cough Medicine You Ever Had in the Home, Money Cheerfully Refunded.

If you could buy four sacks of good flour for the price of one, would you hesitate? We are making you the same offer on our cough remedy: four times as much for 50c as if you bought the ready made kind, and guaranteed to give satisfaction. Could you ask more?

You might combine all the other pines that are used for coughs and colds, then you could not hope to have a cough remedy equal to our Glando Pine. Glando Pine is recommended for coughs, colds, hoarseness, bronchial affections, croup, throat irritations or any condition where a good cough remedy is needed. It relieves the spasmodic cough in whooping cough. The first dose of Glando Pine relieves. It opens up the air cells and makes you breathe deep and easy. Children like to take it.

Mr. Shearer, owner of the machine shop of Haveland, Ohio, gives the following testimony: "My son had a cough for several years. We began to think his case was hopeless. He got no relief until he got Glando Pine. Three bottles cured him. I believe Glando Pine saved his life."

Ask your druggist for a bottle of Glando Pine (50c worth). This will make one pint of excellent cough medicine. Directions with each bottle. Manufactured by the Glando-Aid Co., Fort Wayne, Ind.

GOOD-BYE, GOD BLESS YOU

I like the Anglo-Saxon speech,
With its direct revealings:
It takes a hold and seems to reach
Way down into our feelings.
That some folks deem it rude, I know,
And therefore they abuse it;
But I have never found it so—
Before all else I choose it.
I don't object that men should air
The Gallic they have paid for
With "Au revoir," "Adieu, ma chere,"
For that's what French was made for;
But when a crony takes your hand
At parting to address you,
He drops all foreign lingo and
He says: "Good-bye, God bless you."

This seems to me a sacred phrase,
With reverence impassioned—
A thing come down from righteous days,
Quaintly, but nobly, fashioned.
It well becomes an honest face,
A voice that's round and cheerful;
It stays the sturdy in his place,
And soothes the weak and fearful.
Into the porches of the ears
It steals with subtle unction,
And in your heart of hearts appears
To work its gracious function.
And all day long, with pleasing song,
It lingers to caress you.
I'm sure no human heart goes wrong
That's told "Good-bye, God bless you."

I love the words, perhaps, because
When I was leaving mother,
Standing at last in solemn pause,
We looked at one another.
And I—I saw in mother's eyes
The love she could not tell me—
A love eternal as the skies
Whatever fate befell me.
She put her arms around my neck
And soothed the pain of leaving;
And, though her heart was like to break,
She spoke no word of grieving.
She let no tear bedim her eye,
For fear that might distress me;
But, kissing me, she said "Good-bye,"
And asked our God to bless me.

A WALLED CITY OF WOMEN

A little sunny village has grown up inside a high wall in France within the last year. Its square flat houses stand in straight even rows and along one side of the city wall is a long dormitory for single women. There are many more of them than of the families in the drab little houses. The village is full of women—old, young, middle-aged—whose faces, hands and hair slowly are turning yellow from the powder which it is said will eventually affect their lungs. But most of them are refugees and the fact that they are giving up their good looks, their health, and perhaps their lives in the munition factory, is of little moment to them. They have come into the walled town from ruined villages and devastated farms with their frightened little children, their despairing old people, carrying all their earthly possessions in tiny bundles. In their individual lives there is no future; in all their world there is no interest but the conquest of the Hun.

No one comes into this little war community that centers around the big new munitions plant but those who work. Because of the danger and the blighting yellow powder, the work is highly paid and all the workers are volunteers.

The women wear overalls or apron dresses, some of black sateen, some nondescript. The dull garb harmonizes with the yellowing faces and despairing eyes.

Into this modern walled city of despair the Blue Triangle has flashed the first message of hope. The Y. W. C. A. foyer is the only recreational center within reach. The cars which find cafes at the end of the line a mile away, stop running at seven o'clock to save fuel. The city is three miles from the factory.

"My problem," writes the Y. W. C. A. secretary in charge, "is to keep the women occupied in the evenings, to give them good healthy amusement so that they will forget their sorrows and go to bed and sleep, physically tired out from playing."

She goes on to tell of some of the women and girls who come to the foyer:

"There is a pretty little round, rosy-cheeked girl here who is just beginning to show the effects of the powder. The roots of her hair and her forehead are a pale yellow. The palms of her hands are a deep burnt orange and her hands and arms a bright yellow.

"There is an ex-professional dancer, an interesting girl who enjoys the foyer and helps entertain the other girls. There is a professional pianist who does her bit at the noon and evening hours. There is one rough-and-ready girl who speaks English, whose father was an innkeeper in northern France. There is a pretty little girl who is engaged to a French soldier who still is rejoicing over the five minutes she had with him recently during an air raid. His mother is the caretaker here and he is one of six sons in the war. Two of them are German military prisoners, two are civil prisoners in Germany and two are soldiers in the trenches. Her home in the north of France was destroyed and she escaped with a small bundle of such things as she could carry in her hands.

"There is a sweet-faced girl who was a lacemaker in Valenciennes, who came direct to us from the German-ridden section after a hard experience in getting away."

These are the women the Blue Triangle is helping to forget—perhaps only for an hour at a time—the horrors that have blackened their hearthstones and darkened the world.

"My foyer," the secretary writes, "consists of a hall and two large rooms with cement floors. One has a writing table and paper, pens and ink, sewing machines, a cupboard with teacups in it, a large table with papers and magazines, easy chairs and my desk. The other room has a piano, more tables, chairs, ironing boards and a Victrola. There are unframed French pictures and American and French war posters around the room. The walls are painted gray and white."

Saturday evenings they sing and dance. "First they have a chorus," writes the secretary, "such as 'Le Reve Passe' or the 'Hymne des Aviateurs' or something equally thrilling, and at the final notes of triumph a voice at my ears begs, 'Un polka, mees.' The polka finished, there is a call for the 'Hymne Americain' and we sing the 'Star-Spangled Banner,' (Le Drapeau Etoile) in two languages."

These foyers have been established in several munition centers in France. Each one has a cafeteria, a recreation hall and rooms fitted up as rest rooms, writing and sewing rooms. At night these rooms are filled with French girls learning English, bookkeeping or stenography, that they may work in the offices of the American Expeditionary Forces. In connection with each is a large recreation field or park.

At the request of the French ministry of war the Young Women's Christian association has opened clubrooms for the sixteen thousand French women employed in the offices of the war department.

So successful has been the foyer work in France that a call has come from England to the American Y. W. C. A. to bring its Blue Triangle huts and foyers across the channel. The English Y. W. C. A. has established centers for munitions workers on a smaller scale, but after inspection of the American work in France the four English representatives to the Allies' Women's congress in Paris in August, officially requested that the American Y. W. C. A. undertake similar work in England.

The Complexion Is the Health Barometer

A good complexion can not be obtained when the liver, kidneys or bowels are inactive. Bilious or poisonous matter within the body causes the sallow, muddy or splotchy complexion. Why drag around looking tired, old and dejected when Glando Tonic will put you right? It will remove the poisons and give you new life and strength. Glando Tonic acts directly on the liver, kidneys and small glands of the stomach and bowels. Its great popularity is due to the wonderful cures which have been obtained through its use. Sold by druggists or may be secured by sending direct to the Gland-Aid Co., Fort Wayne, Ind. Price. 50 cents.

Death of Small Child.

Virgil H. McClellan, son of Raymond and Frances McClellan, was born at Spencerville, April 5, 1918, and died at Ft. Wayne, November 2, aged 6 months and 27 days.

He leaves to mourn his departure a father, mother, one grandfather and a wide circle of relatives On October 3, he was overtaken with bronchial pneumonia later followed by spinal infection. Every effort was put forth to save his life but to no avail. The funeral was held on Monday at two o'clock from the M. E. church. Rev. Glenn Bryan officiating. Interment at the White City Cemetery.

God has called our little darling
From this land so full of care,
To a home prepared for angles
To a mansion over there.

Though our hearts are torn and bleeding,
For this life, only just begun.
But unto our Blessed Master
We must say—"Thy will be done."

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank our many friends for assisting us during the death of our darling baby, also for the floral offerings.

Mr. and Mrs. McClellan.

Rabbit Breeders Attention.

The Bureau of Agriculture has formed a special department in the interest of the Rabbit Industry, and is asking the Rabbit Breeders in each county or several counties to organize so as to get a line on what is being produced. It is a food conservation and will help win the war. We are asking each rabbit raiser to register by Saturday, November 9, and those in St. Joe and vicinity may do so at News office.

This is endorsed and recommended by the County Food Administration and County Council of Defense.

OFFICAL FOOD NEWS

By Dr. Harry E. Barnard,
Federal Food Administrator for Indiana

Bessaire & Co., Indianapolis wholesale bakers' supply house, admitted violating the food regulations in taking an excessive margin of profit and requested permission to pay $1,000 to the Red Cross. The privilege was granted and the firm promised stricter compliance with the regulations.

Holders of sugar certificates may use them only during the month of issue. Outstanding certificates are void after October 15.

Emma Marsh, wife of a federal employe at Jeffersonville, bought 79 pounds of sugar for a family of four and was permitted to pay the Red Cross $25 as a penalty; Gus F. Richards purchased 16 pounds at one time and was allowed to pay the Red Cross $15. John S. McDonald, federal food administrator for Floyd county, handled both cases.

Housekeepers are urged to avail themselves of the glass and other substitutes for tin in canning and preserving. Salting and drying also are advocated for the sake of releasing to the federal government's requirements the metal needed for the business of winning the war. Commercial users of tin, including packers of tomatoes, beans, fruit, etc., have been forced to stringent regulations in their demands for cans.

County Food administrators have been advised of the plan to enlist the co-operation of school children in the census of live stock to be taken by the United States Food administration, in Indiana, October 15. Blanks upon which the reports of the scholars are to be made are now in the hands of the printers and will be sent forward to school officials in plenty of time to permit of a survey of every quarter section in the state.

County food administrators and school teachers have been advised that this work is most important or they would not be asked to have it done. Upon the reports the world's food apportionment will be largely determined for the ensuing yehr, according to advices from Washington where the complete reports, wholly accurate and reliable, are eagerly awaited.

F. B. Ransom, an Indianapolis attorney, has been made state director of United States Food clubs, among the colored population. He is appointing leaders in the colored communities of the state. His first appointment was Mrs. Emma Duvalle, 1217 Harlan street, Indianapolis, as city president.

Farmers who are selling their wheat at less than the guaranteed price on account of embargoes due to the lack of shipping facilities are asked to have patience. Prospects are good for an improved railroad situation within a few weeks.

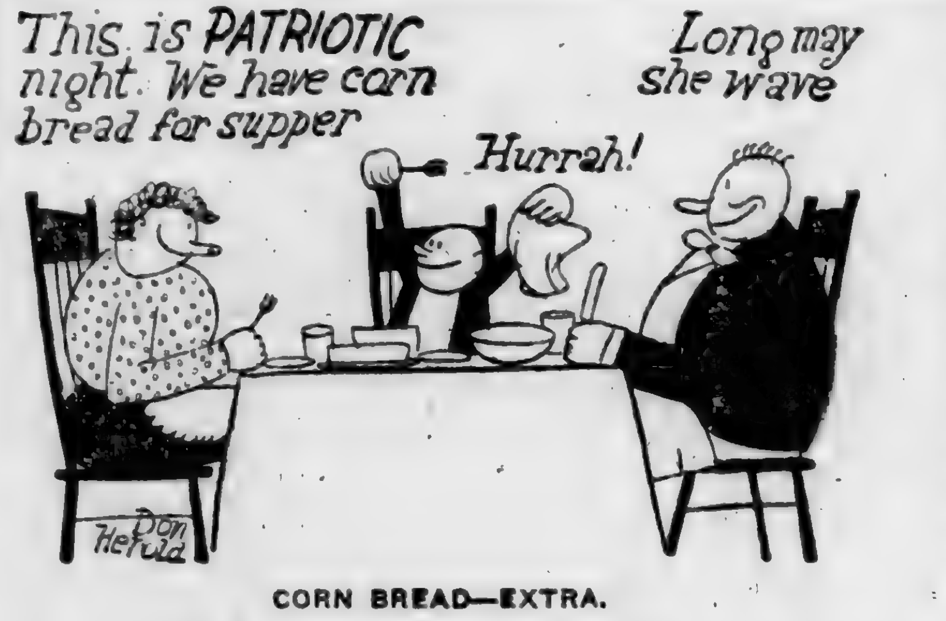
For convenience in the 80-20 sales of wheat flour and substitutes, the food administration authorizes the sale of six pounds of substitutes with each 24½ pounds of wheat flour. This eliminates fractional considerations in the 4-to-1 ratio.

"Cash-and-Carry" stores will be permitted a 5-cent-per-pound profit on butter; "Credit-and-Delivery" stores 6 cents. An exhaustive inquiry is being made into the butter situation with a view to eliminating profiteering. The government's requisition of 25,000,000 pounds of stored butter is not regarded as sufficient justification for the sharp advances that have been made in prices during the past month.

Manufacturers of evaported and condensed milk, alimentary pastes and table salt have agreed to standardize containers and restrict them to fixed quantities in an effort to save tin. The change becomes effective upon the consumption of present supplies.

ONE-MINUTE FOOD TALKS

By Don Herold



This is PATRIOTIC night. We have corn bread for supper
Hurrah!
Long may she wave
Don Herold

CORN BREAD—EXTRA.

Let's just take it for granted that everybody is obeying the 80-20 rule, in regard to wheat flour and substitutes, in every way. Well, that's nice, but there isn't a whole lot of patriotism in that.

These rules, all of them, we really ought to take for granted and as a matter of course—as something that we do with our left hand without thinking. Real patriotism is something additional.

Patriotism should have originality in it. It should be full of fire, full of spirit. It should move us to do things on our own accord, things that nobody has thought to TELL us to do. It should be our own stuff through and through.

Discipline is absolutely necessary—but patriotism goes leagues farther than discipline dictates.

Why, every man is simply SUPPOSED to buy a certain amount of Liberty Bonds and everybody is simply SUPPOSED to live up to certain food regulations. It is not until we have bought bonds we can't afford and eaten food that we HATE that we really start to be patriotic.

The food administration has asked that if you make corn bread you make it out of corn meal not purchased under the 80-20 rule. Corn meal bought as a substitute should be used in wheat flour.

Here's a chance to be patriotic. Have corn bread several times a week at your house. There aren't any rules that require it, so if you do it, it's patriotic.

Don't use any of your 80-20 corn meal for this. Get some corn meal extra, just for this purpose.

Make corn bread a patriotic CEREMONY at your house.

Eat corn bread. Eat it as a ritual. Eat it extra. Eat it until it hurts, as they say of buying Liberty bonds. Eat it until the Kaiser is black in the face. Eat it as you would wear sackcloth and ashes—patriotic sackcloth and ashes. Mighty darn pleasant sackcloth and ashes. Pass the bread.

Buy your next writing tablet and package of envelopes at this office.

the Blue Valley System

It Makes Better Butter
It Sells for a Higher Price
It Pays More for Cream.

This "SYSTEM"

Backed by 150,000 Farmers

—And Everyone Gets MORE MONEY for His Cream

It is unwise to refuse to be open to conviction any longer. That which 150,000 farmers do—is safe and profitable for you to do. Therefore to dispose of your cream to other buyers is equal to selling your farm products at a LOSS.

That loss represents a nice sum, figured by the month or year—in time, enough to buy another cow, a new separator, or pay the taxes.

Save this money—the money that goes into the pockets of the middleman and cream wagon haulers—into rental of local cream stations, cost of horses, wagons, testing equipment, etc.

Selling direct to us wipes out every penny of this unnecessary expense—and you get the benefit.

You not only get the benefit of this saving, but under our system we make better butter, which sells for a higher price—and that makes it possible for us to give you a STILL larger check for your cream.

INVESTIGATE!

Your achievements in farming cannot rise higher than your resolutions. Resolve today to ship us your next can of cream. We guarantee the size of your check will be larger and satisfy you perfectly.

Doing business with us not only brings you a greater net profit from your cows but it affords you the pleasurable satisfaction of immediate delivery of your cream cans and a check by return mail.

The extra profit we pay 150,000 customers is offered to you. Accept it. Ask for details and Bulletin No. 148 Address nearest creamery.

SWIFT & COMPANY U.S.A.

No Mystery in Meat

Some things are so simple that they have to be explained again and again. When things are obvious, people keep looking for mysteries behind them.

So it is with the packing business. The mere size of Swift & Company confuses many. Because their imaginations are not geared up to scale, they believe there must be magic in it somewhere—some weird power.

Swift & Company is just like any other manufacturing business run by human beings like yourself; it takes in raw material on the one hand and turns out a finished product on the other.

Swift & Company keeps down the "spread," or the expense absorbed between raw and finished material, to as low a figure as possible. (If it didn't it would be put out of business by others who do.)

How much Swift & Company pays for the raw material, and how much it gets for the finished product, depends upon conditions which Swift & Company does not control.

It depends entirely upon how much people want the finished product, and how much raw material there is available to make it from.

The profits of Swift & Company amount to less than one cent per pound on all meats and by-products—less than one-fourth of a cent on beef.

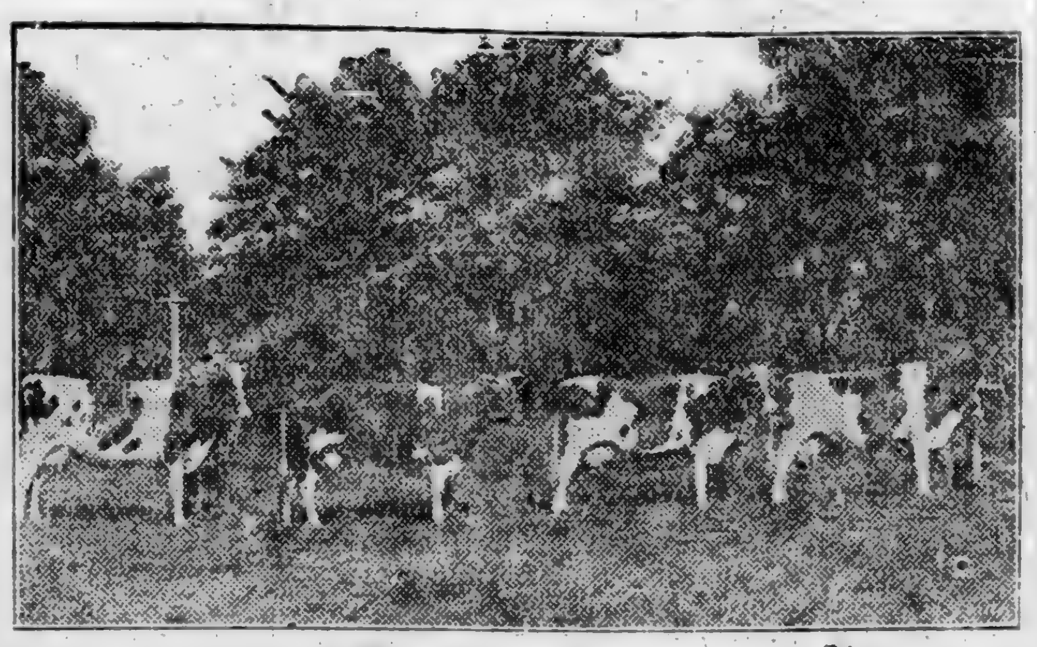
KEEP NONE BUT PROFITABLE COWS.



Cull All but the Wage-Earning Cows From the Herd.

FIND OUT WHAT EACH COW GIVES

Feeds Are Costly and Scarce, So Don't Waste Them on Unprofitable Animals.

DISCARD ALL THE BOARDERS

Make Every Pound of Grain Produce Maximum Amount of Milk—Intensive Use of Scales and Babcock Test Favored.

A fire will not burn without fuel, an engine refuses to run without oil, and a dynamo balks sans power. The farmer who tried to winter his horse without feed evidently is not conversant with these facts. Hence the horse died. Similarly the dairyman who tries to produce a regular and generous flow of milk from a herd that is fed on a hit-or-miss, hand-to-mouth style of ration, lives to learn. There are many unprofitable dairy cows in the country today because farmers are wasting labor and feed in attempting to transform low-producing cows into wage-earners or because dairymen are underfeeding the productive and overfeeding the shirker animals in their herds.

During the period of the war, with grains in limited supply and high-priced, the maximum of care should be exercised to prevent the waste of any of these valuable materials. Under existent conditions all farm roughages should be utilized to the fullest extent consistent with economic production. However, it is the height of folly to starve the deserving dairy cows in order to save grain. Good cows must be fed and fed well. Every effort should be exerted to produce as much milk as possible and still to maintain the cows in the pink of productive condition. Feed the profitable cows to capacity according to their production. Cull the unprofitable cows from the herd immediately. The manufacture of beef in the dairy barn does not pay even in view of the high prices which fat cows now bring for butcher disposition.

Know What Each Cow Yields.

Every dairyman should know the daily production of each cow in his herd. Such knowledge can be gained only by the intensive use of the scales and the Babcock test. This is the era of the cow-testing association, as such co-operative work is effective in the detection of unprofitable cows as well as in properly regulating the amount of feed which should be supplied to each cow in the herd. The records of one cow-testing association show that during a two-year period the cows which received 1,200 pounds of concentrates yielded an average income above the cost of feed of $33 an animal, while the cows which were fed between 1,200 and 1,800 pounds of concentrates yielded an income in excess of feed costs of $42. The animals which were fed over 1,800 pounds of concentrates earned a net of $55 a head over feed cost. These figures illustrate the value of better cows and better systems of feeding according to production.

The average of the records of 40 cow-testing associations shows a rapid advance in income over cost of feed as the quantities of grain fed increased. In this instance the cost of concentrates for the first lot of cows was $7 apiece, while their income over cost of feed was $5. The concentrates for the best lot of cows cost $38, while their net earning capacity was $118. In a word, it would require a herd of 23 cows similar to those in the first group to produce as much income over cost of feed as was produced by the average cow of the last group.

A common fault which exists among many dairymen who are unfamiliar with the value of cow-testing work is that they fail to feed grain to their dry cows while many of them do not even feed a balanced ration to the best of their cows. When grain is fed it is dished up with a scoop shovel and all the cows are fed alike regardless of production. Under such a method of management good cows are underfed while comparatively worthless individuals are parasitic on the profits of their more industrious mates. Where such conditions exist it is of paramount importance that the farmer locate and dispose of the poor cows while he should feed the remainder according to production in order that the income over cost of feed may be increased.

Do Not Waste Grain.

Much grain is wasted by feeding it to cows that do not respond to better feed. The scoop shovel method of feeding all cows is worthy of vigorous condemnation. A study of cow-testing association records demonstrates that good cows should always be fed well. Grain is never so high-priced that it is not profitable to feed it to high-producing cows, the price of market milk and other conditions being equal. On the other hand, grain is never so cheap that it can be fed to low producers without much waste and loss.

Two large herds in a certain cow-testing association were fed alike, both being supplied with a comparatively high grain ration. One herd responded to the liberal feeding while the other did not. The average income per animal over cost of feed for the first herd was $75 while for the second herd it was only 64 cents. These results strikingly demonstrate the value of high-producing cows which are well fed according to production. The low-producing herd was fed a high grain ration regardless of milk yield and as a consequence much valuable grain was wasted. Present conditions demand that all such wastes should be eliminated by the retention of none but high-producing cows in the herd.

Feed According to Production.

A careful tabulation of the feed records of another cow-testing association in which milk production and income over cost of feed were high, reveals the fact that the cows were liberally but economically fed. Silage and leguminous hay constituted the roughage portion of the ration while the grain was fed according to known production of butterfat. During the winter these cows received one pound of grain daily for each pound of butterfat which they produced a week, while during the summer when pasture was short some supplementary grain was also provided. During cold weather the cows consumed an average of 33 pounds of silage a day, while during the summer pasturage periods each cow received a total of 676 pounds of soiling crops. Generous milk flow and a high butterfat test were the results of this liberal feeding. The average butterfat production of all the cows on test in that association was 296 pounds and the average income over cost of feed was $56 a year. By the more liberal use of soiling crops and silage the cost of production could even have been lowered.

It is not only the patriotic duty of every dairy farmer to make the most of his grain but it is also more money in his pocket where he feeds his cows according to production and capacity. In England the laws now limit the amount of grain which can be fed to dairy cows and other classes of live stock, and similarly in this country patriotic common sense and public opinion should combine in effecting the same end without actual recourse to legal assistance. This means that every pound of dairy feed should be devoted to the intensive production of milk. Keep good cows and feed them well.

GIVE LIBERAL RATION

If dairy cows are to be fed for profitable production they must receive a liberal ration at all seasons. In summer pasture generally is depended upon, but often it must be supplemented by soiling crops or silage, and sometimes by concentrates as well. For winter feeding, the ration usually is composed of hay, silage, and a mixture of grains. In properly balancing the ration the grain mixture is compounded to fit the roughage with due consideration for cost, bulk, palatability, and physiological effect upon the cow. For best results, cows must be fed individually, salted regularly, and furnished with all the clean water they will drink.

SAFE, GENTLE REMEDY CLEANSES YOUR KIDNEYS

For centuries GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil has been a standard household remedy for kidney, liver, bladder and stomach trouble, and all diseases connected with the urinary organs. The kidneys and bladder are the most important organs of the body. They are the filters, the purifiers of your blood. If the poisons which enter your system through the blood and stomach are not entirely thrown out by the kidneys and bladder, you are doomed.

Weariness, sleeplessness, nervousness, despondency, backache, stomach trouble, headache, pain in loins and lower abdomen, gall stones, gravel, difficulty when urinating, cloudy and bloody urine, rheumatism, sciatica and lumbago, all warn you to look after your kidneys and bladder. All these indicate some weakness of the kidneys or other organs or that the enemy microbes which are always present in your system have attacked your weak spots. GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules are what you need.

They are not a "patent medicine," nor a "new discovery." For 200 years they have been a standard household remedy. They are the pure, original imported Haarlem Oil your great-grandmother used, and are perfectly harmless. The healing, soothing oil soaks into the cells and lining of the kidneys and through the bladder, driving out the poisonous germs. New life, fresh strength and health will come as you continue the treatment. When completely restored to your usual vigor, continue taking a capsule or two each day; they will keep you in condition and prevent a return of the disease.

Do not delay a minute. Delays are especially dangerous in kidney and bladder trouble. All druggists sell GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules. They will refund the money if not as represented. GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules are imported direct from the laboratories in Holland. They are prepared in correct quantity and convenient form, are easy to take and are positively guaranteed to give prompt relief. In three sizes, sealed packages. Warmly Greeted.

A rookie was placed on guard on a post between the officers' quarters and the camp, in the middle of a clump of large trees. He was beating his post quietly when he heard footsteps.

"Halt! Who goes there?" he challenged.

"Officer of the day," was the reply.

The guard answered with the usual formula, and while the officer was advancing the guard did likewise, in ignorance of the fact that he should have stood still. As he stepped forward his feet tripped against an outcropping root of a tree and he fell. With a perfectly good pair of soldier lungs he said: "Hell's fire!"

The officer replied: "No, sonny; officer of the day," and passed on.

"Every Step a Torture," Says Mrs. Whitenack—But Doan's Cured Her

Mrs. Florence Whitenack, 84 Armstrong Ave., Jersey City, N. J., says: "I suffered with rheumatism for six or seven years. My limbs and joints were so stiff and swollen, I could walk only with difficulty and the pains in my hips were so severe, I could hardly bear them. Every step I took was torture. My feet and limbs were swollen and so sore, I could hardly bear my weight on them. During the night I would lie awake for hours and become so nervous, I would have to get up. Dizziness came over me suddenly and my sight blurred. I was never free from the miserable backaches and rheumatic pains. I used different remedies, but I didn't get any better. Then I commenced to use Doan's Kidney Pills. The swellings began to leave right away and I continued to use them. The pains and aches left my back and hips and I am cured of the rheumatism and all signs of kidney trouble."

WOMAN'S NERVES MADE STRONG

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Winona, Minn.—"I suffered for more than a year from nervousness, and was so bad I could not rest at night—would lie awake and get so nervous I would have to get up and walk around and in the morning would be all tired out. I read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and thought I would try it. My nervousness soon left me. I sleep well and feel fine in the morning and able to do my work. I gladly recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to make weak nerves strong."—Mrs. ALBERT SULTZE, 608 Olmstead St., Winona, Minn.

How often do we hear the expression among women, "I am so nervous, I cannot sleep," or "it seems as though I should fly." Such women should profit by Mrs. Sultze's experience and give this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a trial.

For forty years it has been overcoming such serious conditions as displacements, inflammation, ulceration, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, dizziness, and nervous prostration of women, and is now considered the standard remedy for such ailments.

JUST A LITTLE SMILE

More Than Skeptical.

"Well, Dick, how's business?" said one traveling salesman meeting another.

"Rotten!" was the answer. "How is it with you?"

"Fine! Simply fine! On my last trip I sold one man a $6,000 bill and another one $5,000."

"So? Well, I think I ought to get a commission on those sales."

"That's just the point. Everybody is traveling so fast that nobody stops to pronounce anything."

Finicky Woman.

"What boat did you come back on?"

"The Mary Ann. It caused me a lot of trouble, too."

"In what way?"

"I had the dickens of a time convincing my wife that because the ship had a plebeian name like Mary Ann was no sign that it was that kind of a vessel."

Better Paid.

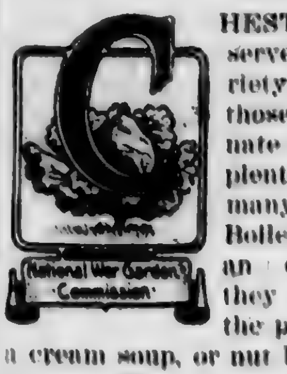
GOOD THINGS IN SEASON.



CHESTNUTS may be served in such a variety of dishes that those who are fortunate enough to have plenty may serve many dainty dishes. Boiled and served as an escalloped dish, they will nicely take the place of meat; as a cream soup, or nut loaf or in Nesselrode pudding they are the nut par excellence.

Chestnut Soup.—Cook two cupfuls of shelled and blanched chestnuts in chicken stock until tender. Press through a sieve and add a cupful of rich hot milk with the same of the broth, celery salt, salt, cayenne and nutmeg to season. Cook two tablespoonfuls of onion in three of chicken fat, add two of flour and stir into the soup. Cook five minutes, add a cupful of hot cream and serve at once. Milk may be used with a beaten egg in place of cream. Serve strained.

Nesselrode Pudding.—Make a custard of three cupfuls of milk, one and a half cupfuls of sugar, and the yolks of five eggs, strain, cool and add a pint of thin cream, a fourth of a cupful of pineapple sirup and one and a half cupfuls of prepared chestnuts, then freeze. To prepare the chestnuts, shell, cook, remove brown skin and force through a strainer. Line a two-quart melon mold with part of the mixture and to the remainder add half a cupful of candied fruit, cut in small bits, one-quarter of a cupful of Sultana raisins and eight chestnuts broken in pieces and soaked several hours in maraschino sirup. Fill the mold, cover, pack in salt and ice and let stand several hours to ripen. Serve unmolded on a platter garnished with whipped cream sweetened and flavored with maraschino sirup.

Chestnut Pie.—Prepare a custard for a pie, fill the crust and sprinkle finely chopped chestnuts over the top before putting into the oven.

Chocolate Nut Pudding.—Mix a cupful of soft breadcrumbs with two cupfuls of scalded milk, one cupful of chopped chestnuts, a half teaspoonful of salt, two egg yolks and three-fourths of a cupful of honey, one square of chocolate grated, then fold in the beaten whites of two eggs and bake in small molds 20 to 30 minutes.

October's child is born of woe,

But place an opal on her breast

PREPARE FOR WINTER.

IN EVERYBODY'S garden these days there are foods that will go to waste unless they are taken care of before spoiling. Windfall apples that are bruised and unsightly will make jelly, jam, marmalades, chutney or cider for the mincemeat. Remove imperfections before using.

When preparing grape jelly or grape juice, save the pulp and make marmalade; it may be mixed with apple, thus extending the grape flavor.

Chili Sauce.—Chop a half a peck of ripe tomatoes that have been peeled, add five good-sized onions and eight green peppers, also chopped; two and a half tablespoonfuls of salt, a half cupful of brown sugar, a tablespoonful of ground cloves, a half tablespoonful of ground cinnamon, one teaspoonful of celery seed and two cupfuls of vinegar. Cook slowly, stirring occasionally for an hour and a half. Bottle and seal.

Uncooked Cucumber and Onion Chow Chow.—Chop three pints of onions and three quarts of seeded cucumbers, two and a half cupfuls of red and green peppers chopped, two cupfuls of chopped celery or cabbage, one tablespoonful of pepper, two and a half tablespoonfuls of salt, and three tablespoonfuls of celery seed. Mix and add mild vinegar to make of the right consistency.

Spiced Grapes.—To seven pounds of ripe Concord grapes pulped and cooked until soft and rubbed through a sieve, add the skins and four pounds of brown sugar, and a quart of vinegar, cook an hour and a half or until the skins are tender. Add a tablespoonful of ground cloves, the same of cinnamon, and a half teaspoonful of white pepper. Cook ten minutes longer, then seal in sterile jars.

Tomato Butter.—Blanch ripe tomatoes, remove the skins and stew. To each four quarts allow seven cupfuls of brown sugar, a tablespoonful each of cloves, cinnamon and a teaspoonful of allspice. Stew very slowly until the mixture is thick and store in stone crocks.

One way to make a butter stretcher is to add a pint of scalded and cooled milk to a pound of butter, beat it in with a wooden spoon until well blended. There is a sort of beater to be bought for this purpose called a butter merger.

EVERY DAY LUNCHEONS.

NICE, tasty hot soup is a dish which is worth while to serve for beginning of the noonday meal. The kind of soup depends upon taste, season and the amount one wishes to expend. A simple cream soup is wholesome, easy to prepare and inexpensive, so why slight the cream soup?

Cream of Cheese Soup.—Slice a large onion into a pint of water and boil until tender. Remove the onion and add two cupfuls of milk with a pinch of soda. Pour this liquid upon one tablespoonful of butter and flour cooked together. When the mixture thickens add half a cupful of grated cheese and one well beaten egg. Season with salt and pepper and serve hot. Do not boil after adding the egg.

Corn and Chicken Soup.—Use six cupfuls of water in which a chicken has been cooked. Add one cupful of corn and half a cupful of chicken cut very fine. Season with salt, red pepper and celery salt. Simmer half an hour, then add a tablespoonful of butter and half a cupful of milk. Bring to the boiling point and serve. To make a richer and more nourishing soup, an egg yolk may be added.

Quick Bread Pudding.—Cut thin slices of bread into two-inch squares and arrange in a buttered baking-dish with layers of raisins, chopped figs, or canned grated pineapple. Pour over it a pint of milk in which an egg has been stirred, add a little honey for sweetening and bake about twenty minutes.

Spiced Apples With Cider.—Take a cupful each of brown sugar and cider, one-fourth of a cupful of good vinegar, two bay leaves, twenty whole cloves, six whole allspice, two inches of cinnamon and a blade of mace. Put into a saucepan and bring to a boil. Pare and core eight tart apples cut in quarters, add to the sirup and simmer gently until tender. Skim out and boil down the sirup until it is thick as honey, pour over the fruit and serve very cold with cake.

MEATLESS DISHES.

FOR those who cannot eat meat and for others who will shorten the meat ration to save for our armies, the following recipes may prove helpful:

Eggplant Croquettes. — Cook a good-sized eggplant until tender in boiling salted water, then drain, peel and mash it finely, adding breadcrumbs, egg, butter, and seasoning. Cool, make into croquettes, roll in beaten egg, then in crumbs and fry a golden brown in hot fat. Serve with a brown sauce.

Noodles With Peppers.—Cook sufficient noodles for the family; when tender, drain and add a small can of red peppers, a cupful of stock or gravy, salt, pepper and a tablespoonful of sweet fat. Simmer together for ten minutes and serve hot.

Curried Cauliflower.—Boil a firm white head of cauliflower in salted water; when tender, drain and pour over it the following sauce: Melt two tablespoonfuls of butter, add a tablespoonful of chopped onion, two teaspoonfuls of flour and one of curry powder, a teaspoonful of chopped apple, cook all together then add one-half cupful each of water and milk with salt to season, pour over the cauliflower and serve at once.

Spanish Rice.—Chop one small onion fine, add one chopped green pepper and cook ten minutes in two tablespoonfuls of oil. Add four sliced tomatoes and a half cupful of hot water. Cook to the boiling point then add a cupful of rice. Cook slowly one hour, adding more water if needed to keep it moist. The rice is previously cooked before adding to this dish.

Carrots With Rice.—Scrape and cut into thick slices a dozen small carrots, cook them tender in seasoned stock to cover. Make a white sauce and place the cooked carrots with cooked rice in alternate layers with the white sauce, season well, cover with buttered crumbs and bake until the crumbs are brown.

A dish of canned or preserved fruit with a simple cooky and a cup of tea makes a most satisfactory dessert.

HOW TO USE VICK'S VAPORUB IN TREATING SPANISH INFLUENZA

The Influenza Germs Attack the Lining of the Air Passages. When VapoRub Is Applied Over Throat and Chest, the Medicated Vapors Loosen the Phlegm, Open the Air Passages and Stimulate the Mucous Membrane to Throw Off the Germs.

In Addition, VapoRub is Absorbed Through and Stimulates the Skin, Attracting the Blood to the Surface and Thus Aids in Reducing the Congestion Within.

CALL A PHYSICIAN — GO TO BED — STAY QUIET — DONT WORRY

There is No Occasion for Panic—Influenza Itself Has a Very Low Percentage of Fatalities. Not Over One Death Out of Every Four Hundred Cases According to the N. C. Board of Health. The Chief Danger Lies in Complications Arising, Attacking Principally Patients in a Run-Down Condition—Those Who Don't Go to Bed Soon Enough, or Those Who Get Up Too Early.

Spanish Influenza, which appeared in Spain in May, has all the appearance of grip or la grippe, which has swept over the world in numerous epidemics as far back as history runs. Hippocrates refers to an epidemic in 412 B. C. which is regarded by many to have been influenza. Every century has had its attacks. Beginning with 1831, this country has had five epidemics, the last in 1889-1890.

THE SYMPTOMS.

Grippe, or influenza, as it is now called, usually begins with a chill, followed by aching, feverishness and sometimes nausea and dizziness, and a general feeling of weakness and depression. The temperature is from 100 to 104, and the fever usually lasts from three to five days. The germs attack the mucous membrane, or lining of the air passages—nose, throat and bronchial tubes; there is usually a hard cough, especially bad at night, and frequently all the appearances of a severe head cold.

THE TREATMENT.

Go to bed at the first symptoms, not only for your own sake, but to avoid spreading the disease to others—take a purgative, eat plenty of nourishing food, remain perfectly quiet and don't worry. Quinine, aspirin or Dover's Powder, etc., may be administered by the physician's directions to relieve the aching. But there is no cure or specific for influenza—the disease must run its course. Nature herself will throw off the attack if only you keep up your strength. The chief danger lies in the complications which may arise. Influenza so weakens the bodily resistance that there is danger of pneumonia or bronchitis developing and sometimes inflammation of the middle ear, or heart affections. For these reasons, it is very important that the patient remain in bed until his strength returns—stay in bed at least two days or more after the fever has left you, or if you are over 50 or not strong, stay in bed four days or more, according to the severity of the attack.

EXTERNAL APPLICATIONS.

In order to stimulate the lining of the air passages to throw off the grippe germs, to aid in loosening the phlegm and keeping the air passages open, thus making the breathing easier, Vick's VapoRub will be found effective. Hot, wet towels should be applied over the throat, chest and back between the shoulder blades to open the pores. Then Vick's should be rubbed in over the parts until the skin is red, spread on thickly and cover with two thicknesses of hot flannel cloths. Leave the clothing loose around the neck, as the heat of the body liberates the ingredients in the form of vapors. These vapors, inhaled with each breath, carry the medication directly to the parts affected. At the same time, VapoRub is absorbed through and stimulates the skin attracting the blood to the surface and thus aids in relieving the congestion within.

HOW TO AVOID THE DISEASE.

Evidence seems to prove that this is a germ disease, spread principally by human contact, chiefly through coughing, sneezing or spitting. So avoid persons having colds — which means avoiding crowds — common drinking cups, roller towels, etc. Keep up your bodily strength by plenty of exercise in the open air and good food.

KEEP FREE FROM COLDS.

Above all keep free from colds, as colds irritate the lining of the air passages and render them much better breeding places for the germs.

Use Vick's VapoRub at the very first sign of a cold. For a head cold, melt a little in a spoon and inhale the vapors, or better still, use VapoRub in a benzoin steam kettle. If this is not available, use an ordinary tea-kettle. Fill half-full of boiling water, put in half a teaspoon of VapoRub from time to time—keep the kettle just slowly boiling—inhale the steam arising.

Vick's VapoRub can be had in three sizes—30c, 60c, $1.20—at all druggists.

The Reason.

Coughs and Colds Quickly Relieved

At the first sign of a cold or cough, commence treatment immediately with the best procurable remedy. Schiffmann's Expectorant is guaranteed to be the best and most satisfactory remedy ever used, or money refunded in case it should not prove so. It is so strongly concentrated that 50 cents worth makes 64 teaspoonsful, when mixed at home with honey or sugar syrup. Positively contains no Chloroform, Opium, Morphine or any other narcotic. Pleasant to take and children are fond of it. Druggists everywhere will refund money if it does not give perfect satisfaction, or is not found the very best ever used for Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Croup, Whooping Cough, or Hoarseness. You will be the sole judge and under this positive guarantee absolutely no risk is run in buying the remedy.

Acid-Stomach Makes Millions Weak and Miserable

For years dentists have been telling us that it's acid mouth that ruins the teeth, yet this acid that is powerful enough to eat through the harder than bone enamel of the teeth and decay them, is tasteless. Its presence can be detected only by chemical tests.

No chemical test is needed to tell you that you have acid-stomach.

Indigestion, belching, heartburn, sour stomach, food-repeating, that miserable puffed up feeling after eating, intestinal pains, headaches, etc. These are all Nature's warning to you. They are sure signs of superacidity.

Acid-stomach prevents proper digestion and assimilation, thus causing the blood to become thin and impoverished as a result of which people become sallow-skinned, emaciated, sick and bad looking.

Acid-stomach causes stomach and intestinal fermentation, producing poisons and toxins which, absorbed into the blood and carried throughout the system, cause auto-intoxication, insomnia, nervousness, irritability, mental depression, melancholia, dizziness, vertigo and oftentimes, valvular heart trouble and heart failure.

Acid-stomach causes irritation all along the intestinal tract—irritation so severe and aggravating as to frequently result in catarrh and even cancer of the stomach.

What chance, then, has anyone for robust health, happiness or success if this acid-stomach is allowed to tear down and use up day after day your strength and vitality faster than you can get it out of food you eat. Life is indeed dark and dreary for a person with acid-stomach.

You crave health, strength, the power and will to think and act—don't you? You want to feel full of pep and energy, fine and fit, always eager for work or pleasure.

Then you must rid your stomach of its excess acid. You can start doing it right now. A wonderful modern medicine has made it possible to literally wipe out the excess acid. This remedy is called EATONIC. It is made in pleasant tasting tablets and you take them just like a bit of candy.

And, my, how good EATONIC makes you feel! It banishes acid-stomach miseries like magic! Makes the stomach cool, sweet and strong. Helps you to get full strength out of your food so that, in turn, your body and brain are vigorous, alert and keen.

EATONIC is absolutely guaranteed, so get a big 50c box from your druggist. If it does not help you your money will be refunded. If your druggist does not keep EATONIC, send your name and address to the Eatonic Remedy Company, 1018 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill., and they will at once mail you a 50c box and you can send them the money for it after you receive it.

Red Cross Department

"No Letter." He didn't get a letter from home and doesn't care what happens to him. Send your soldier a cheerful letter tonight and keep him going.

—‡—‡—‡—

Because of yarn shortage, Red Cross chapters are no longer distributing knitted articles direct to drafted men. Red Cross representatives in tamps will make an even distribution of these comforts.

—‡—‡—‡—

A good attendance was at the Red Cross work room last Wednesday. But for the benefit of those who want to help and find it inconvenient to go to the work room can do so by calling on Mrs. J. C. Hull, chairman of home sewing, where they can get garments and instructions for making.

—‡—‡—‡—

In answer to many inquiries occasioned by the Red Cross part in the shipping of Christmas parcels to soldiers overseas, Lake Division Red Cross Headquarters is today able to announce for the information of its organizations that the War Department has arranged to distribute Christmas parcel labels to men now embarking for service overseas.

Men abroad have been given one Christmas parcel label to be returned to friends or relatives in this country. The friends and relatives who receive the labels are to secure from the Red Cross, after November 1, small cartons in which to ship Christmas parcels abroad. The Red Cross has also been designated to inspect the contents of all such parcels and to assist the Post Office in getting the shipments ready to go overseas.

As no Christmas parcels can be accepted without the official addressed label, issued by the War Department, many friends and relatives of men just going overseas, or about to go, have been fearful that the parcel labels would not be forthcoming for the gifts of these men.

Our information, to the effect that the War Department has not forgotten to provide these parcel labels for soldiers not yet abroad, should set at rest the fear of friends and relatives that their boys will not receive Christmas parcels.

—‡—‡—‡—

Use a twenty-seven-inch khaki-colored handkerchief to wrap the gifts. These must be furnished by the sender.

—‡—‡—‡—

All those receiving labels from the boys overseas will please call at the Red Cross rooms on next Thursday afternoon, Nov. 14, and have boxes inspected, wrapped and packed by a committee in charge. Please do not put this off for the postoffice department cannot accept parcels after Nov. 20.

Lands a New Job

H. S. Bowman has accepted a position with the Whitaker Paper Co., of Cincinnati and will go on the road for them Jan. 1st., in northeastern Ohio, northern Indiana and southern Michigan, and will travel out of Whitaker's Detroit Branch. Mr. Bowman was formerly with the Chicago Paper Co., and traveled out of Toledo.

Want to Tell Others

Mrs. Susan Taylor, of Paulding, Ohio, says: "About two years ago, I suffered a general breakdown. I was nervous, my heart fluttered and I could scarcely drag around. I was simply miserable. I got no relief until I used Glando Tonic. The first treatment helped me. I continued the treatment until I am well. I gladly recommend Glando Tonic to others who suffer as I did.

Glando Is Her Doctor Now

Mrs. A. E. Roebuck, of Latty, Ohio, a lady 71 years old, says: "I had for several years suffered fram liver, kidney and heart trouble. I had soreness, swelling and pain in my right side, I was constipated and bothered, with short breath and a full or bloated feeling after eating. At times, my heart palpitated and, other times, it was weak and I would feel faint. I often awoke frightened or in a startled condition. Since I have used Glando Tonic, I am so well that I have decided to let Glando be my doctor in the future."

These ladies, like many others, were filled with poisonous matter caused from a sluggish condition of the liver and other glands. As soon as the poison was removed, their bodies took on new life and health was restored.

Most aged people are troubled with sluggish glandular system; and unless they use something occasionally to relieve this condition, they are miserable. These people find Glando Tonic to be just what they need. If your druggist hasn't it, insist on his getting it for you; or send directly to the Glan-Aid Co., Fort Wayne, Ind. Large $1.00 size only.

OFFICIAL FOOD NEWS

By Dr. Harry E. Barnard, Federal Food Administrator for Indiana.

The usual fall decline in market prices of poultry is due to large receipts of immature and poorly fleshed chickens, scarcity of labor and inadequate refrigerating space. A heavy marketing of moulting hens also has a depressing effect on the market. Producers may assist in stabilizing the poultry market by withholding immature chickens and moulting hens and by extending the normal period of fall marketing well into the winter.

Owing to a misunderstanding of the resolution relative to the preferred classification of agricultural lime, the following statement of R. S. Baker, assistant priorities commissioner, is made public:

"The state official having supervision of agricultural production or soil conservation (in Indiana the director of extension, Purdue University) may supervise without direction or permit from this division the distribution of burned lime and ground limestone for agricultural purposes, and any manufacturer, producer or dealer in burned lime or ground limestone may supply such products for agricultural purposes under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by such director."

The rapid manufacture of the new crop beet sugar in the West and new crop Louisiana cane sugar in the South together with the freer railway transportation conditions, the reductions that we have made in the consumption of sugar in the manufacture trades and the patriotic conservation in the past four months, enables us to increase the household allowance of sugar from two pounds per person per month to three pounds per person per month, with the same ratio to public eating places, as from November 1st. This makes good our promise to increase the household allowance of sugar at the earliest possible moment that our supplies would justify and make it possible for the householder to more freely use the apple, cranberry and grapefruit products and to use the fruits canned during the summer without sugar.

The regulations are also revised to the extent that any person may purchase his whole monthly allowance at one time if he so desires, that is, any family may purchase a month's supply for the entire family in one purchase from the retail trades.

The temporary cessation of the cereal movement of the country due to stoppage of exports to secure army tonnage, has caused a greater ability for internal transportation than would otherwise be the case, and we do not feel that with ability to make distribution we have any right to hold supplies for the householders. We are confident that we can continue on this basis for some months to come from the supplies which we have in prospect. Cuba's crop is promised transportation, so that with these conditions we should be able to maintain allied supplies. Make no changes in classes A B and D. (These include manufacturers of food products, bottlers, etc.)

Now, when we have need for every ounce of food that can be put into form for human consumption, it is the soundest economy to let young turkeys live through the fall bug-and-seed-hunting season. A young gobler that weighs ten pounds in October will weigh twelve or thirteen pounds sixty days later if given a little extra feed along toward the end of that period. A hen in the same time will fill out from seven pounds to nine or ten. Such satisfactory gains can be made at no other time. The U. S. Food Administration suggests that in order to take advantage of this favorable season, no young turkey hens weighing less than six pounds dressed, be marketed.

The retail section of the distribution of perishables of the United States food administration has just issued a modified regulation which states that any advance in cost in excess of seven or eight cents per dozen of eggs will be considered evidence of violation of the rule restricting profits to reasonable figures. The seven cents represents the maximum for stores conducting the cash and carry plan and eight cents for the extra service stores. In allowing also, to the retailer, fractional charges, the food administration asserts that it has taken into consideration the rising costs of operation.

Effective about the middle of November, the United States railroad administration has indicated its purpose to increase the track storage charge for perishables held in cars beyond the free demurrage period of forty-eight hours, to $10 per day. The practice of using cars for worehouses and vending purposes, the food administration is assured, "can not be too strongly condemned," in view of the present transportation situation. Where violations are flagrant and wilful the railroad administration asks a statement of the facts for a more appropriate punishment of the offenders.

Dealers who are averaging costs of fresh and cold storage butter, to their own pecuniary benefit are warned in a special order just promulgated by the United States food administration against such practice. Neither fresh or cold storage butter may be sold by licensees at more than a reasonable advance over cost and each must be figured separately.

Hurt In Action.

Mrs. Frank Scholes is in receipt of a letter from her son, Clark, dated Oct 18, stating he had been wounded. The letter stated that he was in a hospital and would be taken from there to a base hospital. No other information is given, consequently the NEWS is unable to give the nature or severity of the wound.

The letter was signed with Clark's name, but his mother says it is not in his hand writing. Evidently, it was written by some one connected with the hospital. One fact is clear, and that is that the young soldier was not so badly injured but he was able to dictate a letter.

Clark was wounded between the 12th and 18th of October: for on the former date, he wrote to his mother, stating that he was all right; and, as stated above, the letter announcing that he had been wounded was written Oct. 18.

When Uncle Sam called for volunteers, Clark Scholes was among the first to respond to the call, resigning from the office of county surveyor to enter the service of his country. He enlisted in the engineer's corps, where he could do the most good. That he did not shirk duty is evidenced by the fact that he is numbered among the wounded.

Clark is the first St. Joe boy to be injured in France. We hope he will be the last and that belated casualty lists will contain no information that will bring sorrow to any St. Joe home.

Christmas Boxes For Soldiers

To those sending Christmas boxes overseas, word came this week to the effect that, if a khaki colored handkerchief is not easily procured, you may send without.

Several Christmas parcel labels have been received up-to date. This (Thursday) afternoon has been set to have as many boxes brought to the Red Cross rooms, to be inspected and packed, as possible. Boxes should not be sent later than Monday to reach Hoboken, N. J., by the 20th.

Tuberculosis Sanatorium

In every county where a vote was taken last week on a county tuberculosis sanitorium, the measure carried by a large majority, Lake county 5 to 1. As a result of the election, Indiana will be richer by sanatoriums in Howard, Grant, Vigo, DeKalb and Lake counties. Plans are already being drawn for these institutions, and erection will be begun at the earliest possible date. In addition to these, Wayne and Madison counties are planning tuberculosis sanitoriums to be erected within a very few months.

Is Killed in Action

Word has been received here that Arthur Long, formerly of this place, was killed in action in France on Oct. 17. The young man went into the army from New Haven He was a brother of Mrs. William Miller, residing west of town. Last summer, the NEWS printed a poem written by Mr. Long; and the death of the soldier-poet is regretted by St Joe people.

Death of J. W. Sherer

James W. Sherer, formerly of this place, died at his home just outside Fort Wayne at 10:15 o'clock Monday night, after a sickness of several week's duration, due to a stroke of paralysis. Deceased was 64 years of age, and was born at Spencerville, Ohio. For years, he resided on a farm northwest of St. Joe, moving from there the latter part of last winter.

Deceased is survived by the widow and three children, the latter being Edward E. and Herbert Sherer, of Chicago; and Mrs. Lenora Koeppe, of Butler. Besides these, there are three step children, whom he reared--Otto E., Albert and Franklin Ginther. There are also, six grondchildren and one brother, Abraham Sherer.

Deceased was a member of the St. Joe M. P. church. Funeral services will be held at the residence at 9 a. m. today (Thursday): Interment at Payne, Ohio.

No. 6 Stops at St. Joe

St. Joe has scored another victory over the B. & O. railroad; and No. 6, due here at 10:19 p. m., stops to let off passengers from Auburn Junction. This much the railroad company has given us without waiting to hear the decision of the state public service board. The stopping of this train is a great accommodation to St. Joe, but is not all that was asked for at the recent hearing at Garrett.

The town asked that St. Joe be made a stopping place for passengers from all regular stops west of here. The action of the B. & O. may be to forestall any such decision by the board. The railroad may hope by granting a little in advance to quiet the people of St. Joe in case they are given all they asked for; that the people will accept part rather than have further trouble. The B. & O. made that trick work once.

What our people should do is to insist on their rights—force the railroad to comply fully with the decision of the state public service commission. Do it right this time, and thereby avoid future trouble over the matter.

And, by the way, to the NEWS is due the credit for the latest victory over the B. & O.

Later.—The decision of the state public utilities commission was received Wednesday morning. By its terms, No. 6 must stop to leave off passengers from any point west of St. Joe, and a flag stop for points east of here where the train stops regularly.

HURRY, MOTHER! REMOVE POISONS FROM LITTLE STOMACH, LIVER, BOWELS.

GIVE CALIFORNIA SYRUP OF FIGS AT ONCE IF BILIOUS OR CONSTIPATED.

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, it is a sure sign that your little one's stomach, liver and bowels needs a gentle, thorough cleansing at once.

When peevish, cross, listless, pale, doesn't sleep, doesn't eat or act naturally, or is feverish, stomach sour, breath bad; has stomach-ache, sore throat, diarrhœa, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of the little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again.

You needn't coax sick children to take this harmless "fruit laxative;" they love its delicious taste, and it always makes them feel splendid.

Ask your druggist for a bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly on the bottle. Beware of counterfeits sold here. To be sure you get the genuine, ask to see that it is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company." Refuse any other kind with contempt.—Adv.

Keep the Trench Fires Burning.

In the trenches there was one man who made himself especially conspicuous by smoking constantly. One of the fellows asked him why he smoked all the time and he answered: "There isn't a blame match in this dugout and if I quit the rest of you fellows won't have a smoke."

HEALTH TALK

Spanish Influenza or Grip

BY DR. LEE H. SMITH.

An old enemy is with us again, and whether we fight a German or a germ, we must put up a good fight, and not be afraid. The influenza runs a very brief course when the patient is careful, and if we keep the system in good condition and throw off the poisons which tend to accumulate within our bodies, we can escape the disease. Remember these three C's—a clean mouth, a clean skin, and clean bowels. To carry off poisons from the system and keep the bowels loose, daily doses of a pleasant laxative should be taken. Such a one is made of May-apple, leaves of aloe, root of jalap, and called Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. Hot lemonade should be used freely if attacked by a cold, and the patient should be put to bed after a hot mustard foot-bath.

To prevent the attack of bronchitis or pneumonia and to control the pain, Anuric tablets should be obtained at the drug store, and one given every two hours, with lemonade. The Anuric tablets were first discovered by Dr. Pierce, and, as they flush the bladder and cleanse the kidneys, they carry away much of the poisons and the uric acid.

It is important that broths, milk, buttermilk, ice-cream and simple diet be given regularly to strengthen the system and increase the vital resistance. The fever is diminished by the use of the Anuric tablets, but in addition, the forehead, arms and hands may be bathed with water (tepid) in which a tablespoonful of saleratus has been dissolved in a quart. After an attack of grip or pneumonia to build up and strengthen the system, obtain at the drug store a good iron tonic, called "Irontic" Tablets, or that well known herbal tonic, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

Tight at Ankles Loose Over Hips

New York.—The substitution of one idea for another as a form of regenerating, rejuvenating and re-arranging the human brain, is as old as psychology. It was practiced, avers a leading fashion critic, probably, long before the word was invented. It is one of the world's fundamental creeds, moral, physical and mental; and when some of the religionists got hold of it as a new doctrine, they were only exploiting what began before the Pyramids.

In the early part of the war, those who were not clever in the art, deplored the extraordinary skill of the Germans in being able to control the masses by deliberately substituting a new idea, covered up by a phrase and hammered in by reiteration. They are doing it today, and so far it has never failed them with their own people. They use the word "defensive" instead of "to conquer."

America is going through many phases today, probably the most powerful in her career, which have come about through the substitution in her composite brain of one national idea for another. And the work filters down through crevices until it seeps through the strata of underlying, and seemingly insignificant, by-products of our national life.

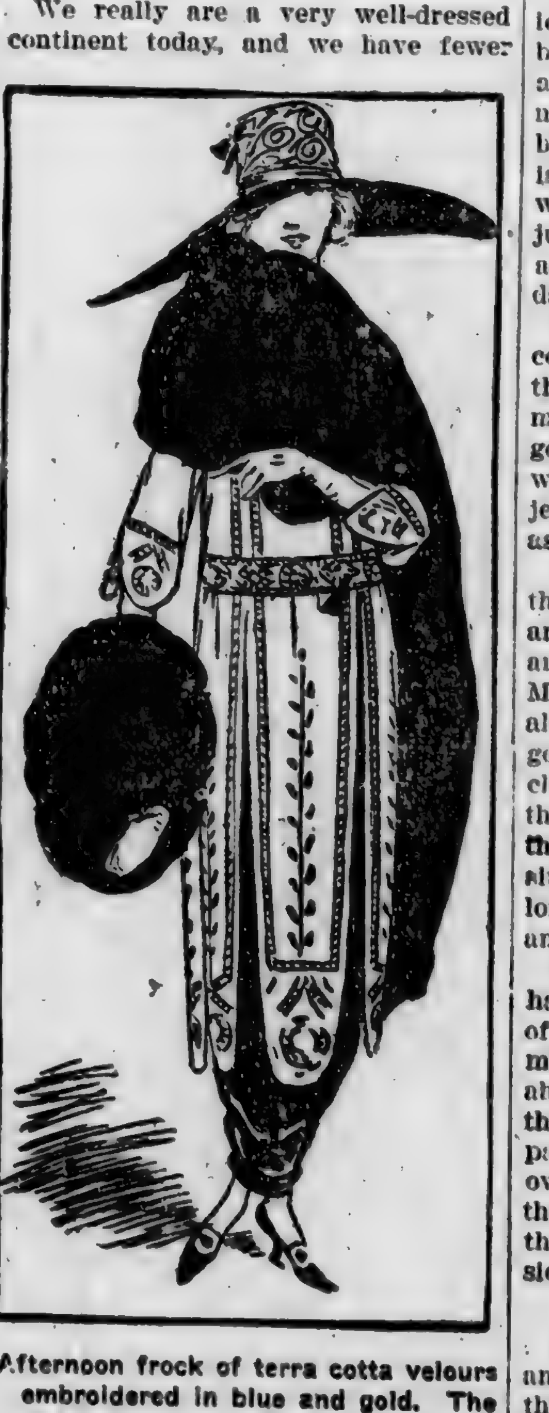
It is this seepage down to dress which is the point of this preface. One idea has been substituted for another. With all the critics against its success, the psychologists watch with interest the public playing into the hands of those who started the idea.

Today American labels are put into French gowns. This is not a wild statement. It is done at some of the best houses. Mannequins will come in wearing frocks which the public is told are the designs of the house itself, and these models are sold to shops and lesser dressmakers and pass throughout the country as the creations of an American designer. They were really made in France, brought to this country by importers, copied verbatim, and turned out as American creations.

That is not honest; but that is not exactly the point of this particular story. The extreme interest centers in the fact that the substitution of one idea for another in the national brain has compelled or persuaded the trade to offer to the public whatever it can that bears an American stamp.

Styles of the Hour.

We really are a very well-dressed continent today, and we have fewer women parading around in old clothes than we expected. Here and there we see a tendency to wild exaggeration, but there is no blatant immodesty. Indecency is left out of the scheme of apparel.



Afternoon frock of terra cotta velours embroidered in blue and gold. The tight skirt is of dark blue satin. The tunic is cut into petal panels. These are in different widths.

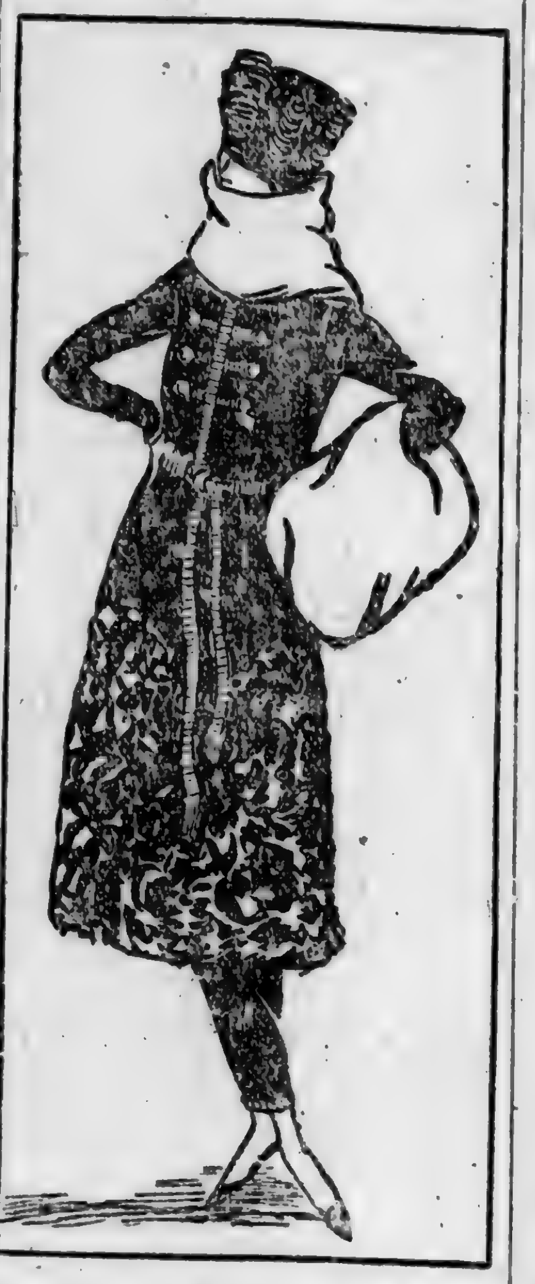
You all know by this time the facts which govern the season's clothes; the skirt which is tight at the ankles and gracefully loose over the hips; the oriental elimination of the waistline; the slimly cut shoulder and back; the long sleeve, or the absence of sleeve; the Arabic tunic; the cravat girdle which ties in front; and the elimination of the bustle effect.

It is quite important that the silhouette has really changed since September. Don't throw up your hands and gasp at this and say that fashion never leaves one alone for a minute. It is really a change that was foreshadowed by those who watched clothes from the beginning of last March. No one should protest at this agreeable change from the silhouette of the planked shad for it carries grace with it.

This loosening up of the hips is a return to the skirt of a nearby season and a far off epoch. It is not adhered to in a strict manner. Remember that. If you want that plumb line from shoulder to knees, have it; but you will find that unless you adopt the straight, chemise tunic of the French frocks, you will prefer more width at your hips than at your knees. It is one of the subtle changes in clothes that has caused women to stop, think and renovate.

Cultivate Japanese Toddle.

The entrance of the hobble skirt plus the Japanese toddle is almost enough to take a woman's mind away from war work. These are strange twins of fashion to be born in this autumn of 1918; but women will overcome the handicap adopt both of them, and, become immensely well pleased with themselves before Thanksgiving day arrives. That is the peculiar and mysterious quality with which women are endowed; adjusting themselves to a circumstance and seeming to fit into it in a few days.



Arabian-inspired street suit of black velours trimmed with gold braid and buttons. The bell-shaped tunic is edged with black caracul. The tight hem of skirt is finished with gold braid.

The Japanese toddle has already become the walk of the moment among the mannequins. They caused immense amusement at the exhibitions of gowns, because they exaggerated it with none of the equally laughable majesty that the French mannequins have assumed for a decade.

We have no Margots or Audreys in this country, but we have our Dolores and Josephines of the immediate past and our Mabels and Madelines and Marguerites of the present; so we get all the gestures that go with the new gowns. It makes an exhibition of clothes quite worth while seeing. It is these mannequins who have introduced the Japanese toddle, and it is a necessity if one would walk in some of the long, draped skirts that pull at the ankles.

Callot makes evening gowns that have a tight jet strap across the back of the ankle to hobble the material. No matter what the nature of the gown above the ankles, it is narrow there to the irreducible minimum. Tunics and panels may float above it, minaret overskirts may swing outward with their bell-shaped hems, but the hem of the skirt has taken to itself the dimensions of a man's trousers.

Adds Turned-Up Cuff.

It has also added the turned-up cuff, and some of the really smart frocks that are turned out have this cuff when they are not draped. It breaks the line of the tube effect and is quite good. It is made of peltry or of a cloth different from that which makes the skirt, and it is often faced with a bit of brilliant blue that Callot combines with black.

Whatever else these skirts may do, they have made the skirt with the flare an impossible garment. Few women dare to wear it. If it is a plaited or a full skirt that hangs in straight lines, its hem is pulled into an extremely narrow strip of cloth or peltry; if it is the skirt that tried to tide many women over last season, the gored one with flaring seams at the side and a bias front width, then alteration is helpless. Rip it open if your mind is economically inclined, and make a cuirass blouse of it, one which is cut in panels below the waist and held in by a loose belt.

All the discarded materials of the household seem to go to these blouses, for we do not look with keen eyes upon a house with a temperature of 60 degrees and a transparent blouse; it makes the gooseflesh rise even now.

The New Suit.

The country boy had come to visit his city friends, and before leaving home his mother had spent much time on his wardrobe, but he soon saw that things were not quite right.

At a small party given in his honor he remained firmly fixed in a corner. At last his hostess, thinking to make him feel more at ease, said: "How nice you look, William; who made your suit?" From the depths came the reply: "Mother, blame it!"

GIRLS! LOTS OF BEAUTIFUL HAIR

A small bottle of "Danderine" makes hair thick, glossy and wavy.

Removes all dandruff, stops itching scalp and falling hair.

To be possessed of a head of heavy, beautiful hair; soft, lustrous, fluffy, wavy and free from dandruff is merely a matter of using a little Danderine.

It is easy and inexpensive to have nice, soft hair and lots of it. Just get a small bottle of Knowlton's Danderine now—it costs but a few cents—all drug stores recommend it—apply a little as directed and within ten minutes there will be an appearance of abundance, freshness, fluffiness and an incomparable gloss and lustre, and try as you will you cannot find a trace of dandruff or falling hair; but your real surprise will be after about two weeks' use, when you will see new hair—fine and downy at first—yes—but really new hair—sprouting out all over your scalp—Danderine is, we believe, the only sure hair grower, destroyer of dandruff and cure for itchy scalp, and it never fails to stop falling hair at once.

If you want to prove how pretty and soft your hair really is, moisten a cloth with a little Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair—taking one small strand at a time. Your hair will be soft, glossy and beautiful in just a few moments—a delightful surprise awaits everyone who tries this. Adv.

DRUGGISTS!! PLEASE NOTE VICK'S VAPORUB OVERSOLD DUE TO PRESENT EPIDEMIC

Tremendous Demand Last Few Days Has Wiped Out Excess Stocks That We Had Estimated Would Last Until Next January. Last Week's Orders Called For One and Three Quarter Million Jars—Today's Orders Alone Amount to 932,459 Jars.

Big Shipments Are En Route to Jobbers. Until These Arrive There May Be a Temporary Shortage. All Deals Postponed —Buy in Small Lots Only.

RETAILERS CAN GET IMMEDIATE SHIPMENTS DIRECT BY PARCEL POST.

This advertisement is written on Monday, October 21st. It is directed to the attention of all distributors of Vick's VapoRub, both wholesale and retail. In an emergency such as the present epidemic—our duty—and your duty—is to distribute VapoRub in the quickest possible manner to those sections stricken by Influenza. We, therefore, call your careful attention to the following:

DANGER OF SHORTAGE IF SUPPLY IS NOT CONSERVED

On October 1st we had on hand, at our Factory and in twenty warehouses scattered over the country, sufficient VapoRub to last us, we thought, until January 1st, allowing for a 50 per cent increase over last year's sales, and not counting our daily output. This big excess stock had been accumulated during the summer months.

Then this epidemic of Spanish Influenza hit us—and in the last ten days this stock has vanished. At first we thought this tremendous demand would last only a few days, but the orders have run:

Wed., Oct. 16......18,504 doz.
Thur., Oct. 17......25,323 doz.
Fri., Oct., 18......39,256 doz.
Sat., Oct. 19......45,833 doz.
Mon., Oct. 21......77,705 doz.

Up to Saturday, October 19th, we have actually shipped for this month $400,284.10, or over two million jars of VapoRub.

THE PROBLEM NOW IS TO DISTRIBUTE VAPORUB QUICKLY.

Most of this tremendous quantity is still en route to the jobbers, but freight and express are both congested nowadays, and it may be some time before this supply reaches the jobbers. In the meantime, therefore, it is necessary that we distribute, as widely as possible, the stock that we are manufacturing daily, together with that now on the jobbers' and retailers' shelves, in order that it may get to the Influenza districts quickly. Our normal output is about 4,000 dozen per day. We are putting on a night shift, but it will be a little while before that is producing.

WHAT WE ASK THE WHOLESALE DRUGGIST TO DO.

Last Saturday we notified all of our jobbers, by Special Delivery, as follows:

1st—Deals and quantity shipments of all kinds are cancelled. Fill no quantity orders of any kind, whether taken by our salesman or by your own. Sell in small lots only.

2nd—Order from us in as small quantities as possible. If you are out we will try to ship a limited amount by Parcel Post or express, and pay the charges ourselves.

3rd—In order to make distribution still quicker, we will ship direct to your retail customers quantities not more than three (3) dozen 30c size at any one shipment.

4th—We are now out of the 60c size and will be for the next ten days.

WHAT WE ASK THE RETAIL DRUGGIST TO DO.

Buy in as small quantities as possible. If you have any quantity orders, given the jobber's salesmen or given to our salesmen, don't bother about them—no need to write us—it is absolutely impossible to fill these orders at this time. If the jobbers in your territory are out of Vick's VapoRub, we will ship you by Parcel Post, prepaid, quantities not more than three (3) dozen 30c size in any one order. Naturally, we can't open accounts at this time, so your check or money order for this amount must accompany order. Don't write us stating to ship thru your jobber, as we then have to wait until we write this jobber and get his O. K. If you wish the goods to come thru your jobber, have him order them for you.

SNOWED UNDER WITH CORRESPONDENCE.

Our force has already been "shot to pieces"—twenty-four of our men are wearing Uncle Sam's khaki—and this recent rush has simply buried us. All our sales force has been called in to help in the office and factory. We just mention this so you won't hold it against us if your wires and letters aren't answered promptly.

SPECIAL BOOKLETS ON SPANISH INFLUENZA.

We will send, on request, to any retail druggist, 100 or more little booklets, just issued, on Spanish Influenza, giving the latest information about this disease—its history—the symptoms—the treatment, and particularly the use of Vick's VapoRub as an external application to supplement the physician's treatment.

NEW WAYS TO USE VAPORUB.

In addition to the usual method of using VapoRub—that is, applied over the throat and chest and covered with hot flannel cloths—our customers are writing us daily telling of their success in using VapoRub in other ways, particularly as a preventive. They melt a little in a spoon and inhale the vapors arising, or melt it in a benzoin steam kettle. Where the steam kettle is not available, VapoRub can be used in an ordinary teakettle. Fill the teakettle half full of boiling water, put in half a teaspoon of VapoRub from time to time—keep the kettle just slowly boiling and inhale the steam arising.

According to a Bulletin just issued by the Public Health Service, Dr. Stiles recommends that the nose and throat be kept coated with some oily substance. For this purpose VapoRub is excellent—just put a little up the nostrils from time to time and snuff well back into the air passages.

Acid-Stomach Makes Millions Old Before Their Time

What is it that robs so many people of their vitality, youth and good looks—makes them all in and decrepit, years before their time? Some say it's rheumatism that is ailing them. Others complain of chronic stomach or liver trouble. Others are bilious. Life is a burden to multitudes of dyspeptics. Severe headache, extreme nervousness, insomnia, mental depression, melancholia, anemia, dizziness, vertigo, heart and chest pains, constipation, etc., claim other multitudes.

Sometimes these people are downright sick. More frequently they are just weak, sickly and unfit, not knowing exactly what is the matter with them. Nearly always they resort to medicines of one kind or another in the hope of getting back their health and strength. And nearly always they are disappointed, because medicines don't build strength unless they set the stomach free from acidity, allowing it to take full strength out of the food eaten.

What is it that causes teeth to decay? Dentists say—acid mouth—that the acid formed by the fermentation of small particles of food lodged in the teeth is powerful enough to eat right through the hard enamel. An acid-stomach presents a similar condition. Excess acid retards digestion. Food in the stomach sours and ferments, causing pain. Gases affect the heart action. The intestines become the breeding place for countless millions of deadly germs or toxic poisons. These poisons are carried by the blood into every part of the system. The famous scientist, Metchnikoff, said — if the system could be kept free from these toxic germs, people might easily live a hundred years or more.

The only safe thing to do is to rid the stomach of its excess acid at once. A way has been found in the wonderful preparation, called EATONIC—a compressed compound that absorbs the excess acid and carries it away through the bowels. Thousands upon thousands now know of EATONIC and its amazing power to clean out the excess acid and leave the stomach sweet, cool and strong—giving it a chance to properly digest food so that you get full strength of what you eat and in this way help Nature build up vigorous health, strength and vitality to take the place in a few days, of sickness, lassitude, weakness.

EATONIC is worth your trial. Its possibilities for restoring health, vigor, energy and vitality are beyond telling you in mere words—you must "just try it."

EATONIC is absolutely guaranteed, so get a big 50c box from your druggist. If it does not help you your money will be refunded. If your druggist does not keep EATONIC, send your name and address to the Eatonic Remedy Company, 1018 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill., and they will at once mail you a 50c box and you can send them the money for it after you receive it.

POWER IN PRINTED MATTER

Scientific Facts Told in Popular Form and Short Sentences Are Replacing Intricate and Verbose Language.

When a locomotive engineer makes his thousandth run he remembers the day. When an actor plays his thousandth night he rings the date on the calendar. The thousandth in anything is noteworthy. So it was that in the United States department of agriculture there was more than ordinary interest when Farmers' Bulletin No. 1000 recently was made ready for public distribution.

There was no effort to make No. 1000 a bulletin of signal moment, one that would be read from cover to cover and from coast to coast. In fact, "Crop Systems for Arkansas," which is the name of No. 1000, will have a rather limited distribution, because the information it contains is of value in only a part of the United States. But all the same, No. 1000 is noteworthy, not only because it is No. 1000, but because it is a sample of the products of a new policy under which department of agriculture publications are being gotten out, and that aims to make them not only informing and dependable, but attractive and interesting, and, therefore, effective.

Bulletin Has Innovations.

No. 1000 has an illustrated cover page, similar in character to those that invite perusal to all farmers' bulletins now being issued. It has illustrations inside that seek not only to break the lines of type, but to demonstrate something better than the type can tell about it. This is not to say that previous bulletins have not been effective and have not contained informing illustrations. But it is believed that on the average farmers' bulletins now are "batting" better than ever before because every effort is being made to "put across" in popular and telling form the agricultural information developed by the scientists of the department.

Bulletins have been shortened materially. Historical notes have been largely eliminated. Latin phrases have been dropped except in rare instances when they are inserted in parentheses to help identify some insect or disease easily confused. Short sentences are replacing intricate and verbose language. These changes carry out the impression given by the attractive covers, which were adopted for the mere purpose of advertising the wares of the department to be found inside. This is proceeding on the assumption that people in general are not so keen about reading government publications —no matter how authoritative—that they will sit up nights doing it when something much more attractive is near at hand.

Recently the department has issued several farmers' bulletins which are strictly innovations—picture books. They are not so complete in pictures of farm operations that they give a motion picture effect when thumbed rapidly, but they do show many short cuts in laborious farm operations. They are suggestive, with enough explanation to enable the ingenious farmer to adjust his work to the labor situation of war time.

Valuable in Cities, Too.

The farmers' bulletins are issued to help farmers and their families in their daily tasks, but some of them are said to be quite as valuable to the city family. As instances, take the bulletins dealing with canning methods, the common household rodents and insects, and ways of economically using various foods. Requests for them by the score are received from town women who have seen them in neighbors' homes.

These are not all the publications of the department. During the war a number of circulars and pamphlets having a direct bearing on winning the struggle are being issued. Then there are the professional bulletins, dealing in less popular form with researches into the science of agriculture. In addition there are several serial publications and the annual reports and other congressional publications, including the department year book and reports of soil surveys.

The policy of reducing in size and making more readable has been extended through all these classes.

Lists of available bulletins, from which selections can be made, will be sent to interested persons on request to the department.

CORN A CHAMPION CROP

Corn, on a given area, will produce more human food than any other crop commonly grown on American farms. This crop heads the list in units of energy produced per acre, and is ahead of all other crops except navy beans and soy beans in tissue-building material. In the latter element soy beans far outclass all other crops, showing nearly twice as much protein per acre as navy beans, which rank second in this regard.

The dairy cow is the most efficient of farm animals in the production of human food (milk) and the hog is the most efficient in the conversion of grain into meat, producing five times as much per acre of crops as does any other animal.

These facts and others are told in the United States Department of Agriculture's Farmers' Bulletin 877, "Human Food From an Acre of Staple Farm Products," which gives an acre-for-acre comparison of the food value of various crops and animal products.

Reducing Fire Danger.

The fire hazard should be considered in the location and construction of all new farm buildings. Many groups of farm buildings are so located and constructed that any fire which might break out in one building would be almost sure to destroy the whole group. When a new building is to be erected it is worth while at least to consider placing it where it will be reasonably safe from fire starting in any other building and where it will not be a menace to other buildings.

Concrete construction is being used on many farms, and it is especially desirable for smokehouses, incubator rooms, and any other small buildings which are exceptionally subject to loss by fire. The first cost of a well-constructed concrete building generally will be greater than that of a wood building of the same size, but the concrete will last practically forever, and will seldom need paint or repairs.

A fire in such a building can do but slight damage to the building itself, and there is very little likelihood of its spreading to any of the adjoining buildings.

Clean Up Garden.

If you had trouble with potato bugs, cutworms, or plant diseases this season you can do a great deal toward controlling these pests next year by giving the garden a thorough housecleaning this fall. Many kinds of insects that feed on garden crops and diseases that affect vegetables pass through the winter protected by or on the remains of the plants. Old cabbage stalks, tomato vines and similar material should be collected and burned. The ground itself should be spaded and sowed to rye or crimson clover, or if neither of these crops can be planted the ground should be allowed to lie rough so that freezing will destroy as many insects as possible.

One of the ways of controlling the corn-root aphis is by fall plowing.

Look out for Spanish Influenza.

Kidney and Bladder Sufferers Regretfully Recall Their Neglect of First Symptom. Use Caution—Get Dodd's.

If Kidney disease attacked suddenly as does Appendicitis or a fever, you would be forced to bed immediately. But it doesn't—its process is slow, destructive and fatal.

You can't afford to disobey nature's first warnings — slightest backache, throbbing pain thru loins, stiffness in stooping or lifting. Take heed immediately of these as well as spots appearing before or puffiness under the eyes, rheumatic pains, nightly arising.

Thousands upon thousands have been relieved in the past 40 years by using Dodd's—they quickly tone and revive sickly kidneys. Be sure your druggist gives you Dodd's—flat, round box with three D's in the name—for diseased, disordered, deranged kidneys. No similar named article will do. Satisfaction or your money back.

Something Wrong Somewhere.

Mr. Clout read in a paper that digestion is stimulated by talk and laughter at meal times; he cogitated over the idea, and finally addressed his family thus:

"Now, this keeping mum at meals has got to stop. You hear me, you girls. You begin to tell stories, and keep up agreeable sort of talk like; and you boys, laugh and be jolly or I'll take and dust your jackets with the strap till you can't stand. Now begin!"

And yet, somehow the jollity seemed forced.

WHY WOMEN DREAD OLD AGE

Don't worry about old age. Don't worry about being in other people's way when you are getting on in years. Keep your body in good condition and you can be as hale and hearty in your old days as you were when a kid, and every one will be glad to see you.

The kidneys and bladder are the causes of senile afflictions. Keep them clean and in proper working condition. Drive the poisonous wastes from the system and avoid uric acid accumulations. Take GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules periodically and you will find that the system will always be in perfect working order. Your spirits will be enlivened, your muscles made strong and your face have once more the look of youth and health.

New life, fresh strength and health will come as you continue this treatment. When your first vigor has been restored continue for awhile taking a capsule or two each day. They will keep you in condition and prevent a return of your troubles.

There is only one guaranteed brand of Haarlem Oil Capsules, GOLD MEDAL. There are many fakes on the market. Be sure you get the Original GOLD MEDAL Imported Haarlem Oil Capsules. They are the only reliable. For sale by all first-class druggists.—Adv.

Patriotic.

Patience—I saw Harry at the patriotic meeting last night. He was in khaki.

Patrice—Oh, you saw him, did you?

Patience—Yes, and he was so patriotic that he stood up during the entire meeting.

Patrice—Oh, that wasn't altogether patriotism. He's joined the cavalry, you know, and yesterday was the first day he'd tried to ride a horse.—Camp Lee Bayonet.

If Worms or Tapeworm persist in your system, it is because you have not yet tried the real Vermifuge, Dr. Peery's "Dead Shot." One dose does the work. Adv.

Celebration at St. Joe

St. Joe, in common with the rest of the United States, on last Thursday celebrated the end of the war. The celebration was a little premature, of course; but as our people were not aware of that at the time, they "whooped 'er up" to the limit of their whooping capacity; and if they did not do it right, it was not their fault. They did it enthusiastically, energetically, unreservedly, untiringly and whole-heartedly. And, lest we forget, if anyone should ask you whether "Doc" Price, Charley Koch and Frank Sechler were there, you can answer "Yes" without putting the recording angel to the trouble of charging you up with another lie.

The jollification was started by the school children at the afternoon recess. Headed by their teachers and each pupil carrying a flag, they marched down town and formed a circle at the public square. Here, under the leadership of C. A. Woodcox, they sang patriotic songs, and D. W. Carson made a short address. Then, after a few more songs, the scholars returned to the school house.

This was the prettiest part of the entire day; and, allow us to remark, also the most appropriate. The News does not condemn the noisy demonstration that followed; for when men are filled with joy, they must have some vent for their enthusiasm. On such occasions, the mouth, coupled with every possible means of making a noise, seems to become the human safety valve, furnishing a means for the escape of the excess exuberance. Then the old saying, "It's all over but the shouting," holds true. But, after all, it is far more fitting when a great national triumph is celebrated, to do so in an orderly manner, with a program that will inspire patriotism and appeal to man's better nature.

In the evening, the town broke loose; and from shortly after supper until after 10 o'clock, shouting, exultant crowds surged back and forth on the streets, with one lull when the leaders and as many followers as they could gather, visited Spencerville; but a return visit by lusty-lunged, hilarious Spencervillians restored the average for the night.

Hoo-ray and hoo rah!

Monday night, St. Joe celebrated a second time, principally a repetition of the first. There was ode exception, however: Rev. A. P. Bourns, of Auburn, delivered an address on the public square. His speech was brief, owing to the chilly weather, and dwelt on the war works drive. Rev. C. O. Johnson presided.

Ask your druggist for a bottle of Glando Pine (50c worth). This will make one nt of excellent cough medicine Directions with each bottle. Manufactured by the lando-Aid Co., Fort Wayne, Ind.

OFFICIAL FOOD NEWS

By Dr. Harry E. Barnard,
Federal Food Administrator for Indiana

Indiana's allotment of sugar totals 8,983,000 pounds for the month of August. This is a reduction of practically one-third. Certificates issued by the Federal Food Administration in July reached a total of 14,021,855 pounds, upon which the distribution totaled 13,012,750 pounds.

Certificates to retailers for August will be based on 2 pounds per capita per month. Hotels, restaurants and public eating houses shall make similar retrenchment by making 2 pounds of sugar sufficient for 90 meals. Heretofore, the per capita allowance has been 3 pounds per month, and the same quantity has been permitted for each 90 meals served in public eating houses.

Certificates for canning purposes will be issued subject to the same restriction that has obtained heretofore—that each purchaser be required to present a certificate upon which appears the 'OK. of the local food administrator, or his authorized deputy.

For the present the issuing of certificates to manufacturers in class "A," which includes soda fountains, soft drink manufacturers, candy manufacturers, bottlers and various other less essentials, will be eliminated entirely.

Reports on the Nation's egg supplies lately received by the U. S. Food Administration, show that the number of eggs in storage in the United States on July 1 was practically the same as on July 1, 1917. With this condition, it is interesting to note that consumption had increased about 17 per cent. indicating that production must also have increased in about the same degree. Imports and exports are a negligible factor compared with the enormous size of the egg trade within the United States.

Prices received by producers for eggs have been gratifying, according to reports from the country egg markets, and poultry markets are still short of birds, due, it is believed, to the high level of egg prices.

The increasing difficulties in securing sugar are said to have impelled many manufacturers, bottlers, soda fountain operators and others normally using sugar, to resort to the use of saccharin. The use of saccharin is deleterious to health, and in violation of the laws of Indiana.

Exports of beef products from the United States aggregated 96,982,000 pounds during May, 1918, which is the highest figure ever reached in one month in the history of the country. More than 96 per cent. of the total went to the four European allies. Their diminished live-stock production largely accounts for the increased demand and explains the need for beef conservation in the United States.

S. Moskowitz of Evansville, a poultry shipper, was permitted to make a contribution of $500 to war charities in lieu of suspending business for a week. He admitted a charge of improperly feeding poultry en route from Evansville to New York, the chicken feed having included sand and gravel.

Owing to the large amount of soft corn last fall there was a general heavy feeding, with a consequent large increase in the weight of hogs when they arrived at market. Export orders were filled with fatter and heavier hogs than the European populations had been accustomed to, and foreign buying agencies now request a return to the customary weights.

The Gary Baking Company of Gary, Indiana, on its confession of using an insufficient amount of substitutes with wheat flour, was permitted to pay to local war charities a contribution of $500.

Charles G. Vahl, a baker of Brownstown, Indiana, who had been warned repeatedly, admitted that he had failed to use the required amount of substitutes, and, as a result, C. H. Wiethoff, federal food administrator for Jackson county, closed Vahl's business for 90 days.

Harlan Visits St. Joe

Several hundred enthusiastic Harlan people visited St. Joe shortly after 3 o'clock Wednesday afternoon. They came in thirty-five automobiles, with flags flying and national colors everywhere in evidence. They had with them a sheepskin band—four old timers on the fife and drum—and they regaled our people with some fine music. The only fault that can be found with their concert is that it was too short. They went from here to Hicksville.

AMONG OUR SICK

There are quite a number of sick people in St. Joe and vicinity; but, among all of them, there are only two well defined cases of influenza. These are Darwin Fry, who is rapidly convalescing, and Mildred Gee, who is still seriously ill.

Three children of John Hart are very sick—Alberta, Gladys and Lillian—the result of ptomaine poisoning. The last is very low; and Alberta, who was recently brought home from the Lutheran hospital, is not out of danger.

Mrs. Elmer Hart and son, Ross, and Mrs. Rolla Wiers are indisposed, with symptoms of influenza; and Mr. and Mrs. Derwood Ridgway and two little daughters are under the doctor's care.

Notice of Final Settlement

Notice is hereby given to all persons interested in the Estate of Andrew Baker deceased, to appear in the DeKalb Circuit Court, held at Auburn, Indiana, on the 16th. day of December 1918, and show cause if any, why my final settlement accounts with the estate of said decedent should not be approved; and said heirs and all others interested, are notified to then and there make proof of heirship or claim and receive their distributive shares.

SPENCERVILLE

Miss Edith Berry left Sunday to spend a few days visiting friends at Fort Wayne.

Lee Hollopeter and wife were Sunday guests of the latter's parents, George Hallabaugh and wife.

Rev. A. K. Mumma gave a thank offering address at the Auburn Lutheran church last Thursday night.

Ernest Johnson, wife and daughter, Thelma, of Concord, were Sunday guests of Frank Rhoades and family.

Oscar Ruppert and family, of Antwerp, and M. Ruppert and son, John, were Sunday guests at the Charles Scott home.

Reason Chaney and wife arrived home on Monday, after spending several days visiting the latter's brother, John Scott, and family, of Auburn.

The Cheerful Workers class of the M. E Sunday school will meet on Tuesday, Nov. 19, at the home of Mrs. George Watson, west of town.

William Schlatter and family Mrs. Sylvia VanZile and son, Clifford, and Mrs. Sarah Rogers motored to Ashley on Sunday and visited George VanZile and wife.

Dr. Martin, of Fort Wayne, will speak at the M. E church next Sunday evening. The quarterly business meeting will be held at Wesley chapel on Monday morning.

The Woman's Home Missionary society of the M. E church met Saturday afternoon at the home of Mrs. R. U. Bowser. One guest, Mrs. Arminta Steward, was present.

The ladies' aid of the Lutheran church will be entertained at the home of Mrs. Ella Horn on Nov. 20, if the day is pleasant; and if stormy, at the home of Mrs. Rose Horn.

The Woman's Home & Foreign Missionary society of the Lutheran church will hold its annual thanks offering meeting next Sunday evening. A special program has been arranged for the occasion.

Thursday afternoon and evening were spent by citizens of this place in rejoicing. The news that the armistice had been signed was proclaimed by the ringing of church bells, beating of drums and noise of all kinds. In the evening, people from the country assisted, and a parade was formed, with Ernest Steward and the drum corps in the lead, followed by twelve men with shot guns and others, some of the last dressed in fancy costumes. John Koch, as Uncle Sam, and Clyde Hart, as the kaiser, were the hit of the evening. At 8 o'clock, the crowd sang several patriotic songs, after which Rev. Mumma made an address. Many then motored to St. Joe to assist the people of that place in celebrating.

THE "TEA PARTY" AND THE KAISER

By LOUIS ALBERT LAMB.

My grandsire painted red his hide
In ancient Mohawk style,
And crept down to the Mystic side
To wait a little while.

Then other Yanks in redskin guise
Collected at the bay
And took the tea ship by surprise
And threw the tea away.

Old George the Third was much averse
To freedom for the Yanks;
His taxes were a deadly curse—
He taxed and gave no thanks.

But when the Mohawk Boston men
Dumped all the tea to port
King George began to think again
And arm for warlike "sport."

He sent his Hessians over here
To kill Cap. Barker's boys.
To burn the school and meeting house
And other such annoys;

But when they came to Bunker Hill
That jolly day in June
And Warren met 'em with a will
They piped another tune.

The Yanks have got a job today
That's worthy of the race;
The kaiser treads a rocky way
And spars to save his face.

But all the Yanks have gone to France
En route for old Berlin:
If we buy Bonds at every chance
You bet the Yanks will win!

Our grandsires dished King George's will
And salted all his tea.
Our boys will do the same for Bill,
Kaiser of Germany!

The only way to push the work
And make Berlin our own,
Is this: Get busy, do not shirk
But BUY THE "FIGHTING LOAN."

UNITED WAR WORK CAMPAIGN NOW ON

Why We Need Much More Than $170,500,000.

John R. Mott, Director General of the Campaign, Gives Ten Convincing Reasons for Raising Fund.

BY JOHN R. MOTT.

1. Because of the remarkable increase of the American army and of its inevitable continued increase. The budgets of at least three of the seven organizations uniting in the forthcoming Campaign were based on data assembled last spring, when it was thought there would be not more than 1,000,000 American soldiers in France by November first. As a matter of fact, the number there by that date will be 2,000,000. When those budgets were made, moreover, it was thought that the total number of American soldiers on both sides of the Atlantic by next summer would not exceed 3,000,000, whereas our military leaders are now preparing for an American Army, before the end of next summer, of between 4,000,000 and 6,000,000.

2. Because of the marvelous expansion of the American Navy. When America entered the War, we had less than 70,000 men in the Navy. There are now over 600,000 sailors and marines and the number will be further greatly increased. Relatively, the organizations which are uniting in their Campaign have neglected the Navy, but it is their desire to help this arm of the service as much as any other, and therefore a much larger sum of money will be needed for this purpose than is now included in their respective budgets.

3. Because this war, unlike others, is not alone a war of armies and navies, but a war of entire peoples. In particular, it involves vast numbers of the industrial classes. Since our financial plans were announced, the claims of these industrial classes at home and overseas have been pressed upon us, and it has been made clear that we must augment greatly our efforts on behalf of the millions of men and women at work in arsenals, in navy yards, and in countless militarized and other indispensable war industries.

4. Because the burden of this war falls so heavily upon the women of America and of the Allies. They have taken the places of multitudes of men engaged in ordinary occupations and have thus released millions for the fighting forces. They are also largely engaged in making munitions and in other essential war industries. The facts concerning the needs of women affected by war conditions convince us that a much larger financial provision should be made on their behalf than the budgets of our organizations contemplate.

5. Because of the comprehensiveness of the ministry being rendered the American Army and Navy and the forces of our Allies. It is the aim of these agencies to place at the disposal of our soldiers and sailors all that is best in American life. We represent to them the American home, the American school and college, the American library, the American forum, the best phases of American club life, the finest aspects of the American stage, and above all the American Churches and Synagogues. This is a colossal program and calls for a large expenditure of money—an expenditure necessarily increasing with the growth of the Army and Navy.

6. Because of the continuity of the service we are seeking to render. We aim to follow the soldiers and sailors from the time they leave their homes, while they are in transit, while they are at the training camps, large and small, while they are on their way to the ports of embarkation, as well as at those ports, while they are on the sea, during their stay at the ports of debarkation, during their experiences in further training overseas, in the zone of combat including the front line trenches, while they are at leave resorts or in the hospitals or in the prison camps, and then all the way back to their homes. The volume of expenditure necessarily grows with the steady enlargement of the fighting forces.

7. Because of the imperative need of placing all these helpful facilities at the service of the French Army of 4,000,000, of the Italian Army of 3,000,000, and of the smaller but very important armies of Russia, of Belgium, of Portugal, of Macedonia, of Palestine, of Mesopotamia, and of Egypt. The claims of these Allied Armies were not sufficiently recognized in the framing of our budgets.

8. Because of the indescribable need of the millions of prisoners of war, who must look to us solely for a comprehensive program in the interest of their physical, mental, social, and moral well-being.

9. Even though the War were to end within a few months, or a few weeks, we should stand in great need of a fund of more than $170,500,000, because this work, unlike that of many other agencies, will have to be continued throughout the entire period of demobilization. While in Europe, I was told by military authorities that it will require a period of fifteen months from the time that the conflict ceases to transport the Canadian Army to their homes, and that it will call for not less than eighteen months to convey the armies of Australia and New Zealand homeward. Without doubt it will take not less than twelve months to bring our American Army home. During that long period they will have virtually all their time on their hands. They will not have the excitement and the incitement of the war period to stimulate their spirits or its intense activities to absorb their attention and utilize their time. Their temptations will be more numerous and persistent. There will be a tendency to let down standards and relax discipline. It is of the utmost importance that plans be made for the wise use of their leisure hours. The practical and significant question is, Shall our men and boys come back to us weaker or stronger men? The period of demobilization should not be allowed to become a period of demoralization but rather should be made one of growth in knowledge and working efficiency and of strengthening of character and life purposes. The Young Men's Christian Association and the other organizations are planning not only to enlarge their recreational program during this period, but to launch a great educational campaign. In popular language it may be described as "The University in Khaki." An Army Educational Commission composed of a group of the leading educators of America has been sent overseas. They have asked for two thousand professors and teachers of American colleges and schools to help in launching educational work for the coming winter, and also to be on hand for the period of demobilization, whenever it comes. We have entered into negotiations with the British and French universities to help us in this vast educational undertaking. One may judge of the great dimensions of the enterprise from the fact that it will require at least $8,000,000 for textbooks and books of reference for the coming winter alone. It ought to be added that no provision is made for this educational program in the budget of $170,500,000 and therefore in itself this plan affords a further reason why we must have a large oversubscription.

10. If there were no other reason, there should be a large oversubscription in order to meet promptly and effectively emergencies and crises which are sure to come. If you take away from war the unexpected, the surprises, the calamities, the emergencies, the crises, you take away war

MESSAGE SENT INDIANIANS

Attorney Carries Governor's Greetings to Boys Overseas.

Indianapolis, Ind.—Governor James P. Goodrich has sent the following message to the Indiana boys at the front. The Governor's message expresses the pride of the people of the state in their fighters and pledges their ceaseless effort in sustaining the men who are battling for civilization.

Cass Connaway, an Indianapolis, Ind., attorney, will carry the greetings overseas. Connaway adjourned his law practice for the period of the war to don the Y. M. C. A. uniform and follow in the wake of his two soldier sons. He will visit the huts, hotels, shelters and dugouts of the Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A., the War Camp Community Service, National Catholic War Council (K. of C.), the Jewish Welfare Board, American Library Association and Salvation Army—the seven accredited welfare agencies that have joined in a United War Work Campaign, November 11-18, to raise $170,500,000 to carry on their work for soldiers, sailors and marines at home and abroad. Wherever he comes across a man from Indiana Connaway will give him the home folks' greeting.

Governor Goodrich's message reads:

"I want you to tell the boys again that we are with them heart and soul; that the people of Indiana are giving their time, their money and whatever else they can to support the boys who have gone over the seas to fight the battles of America.

"We are doing our best but we all feel that even our best is but a paltry sacrifice when compared to that of the young men our state and nation who have gone forth leaving their dearest friends and all material consideration behind, to offer their lives in defense of their country.

"I want you to tell the boys that our hearts go out to them every day and although we are always anxious about their welfare we have no fear of the future. For we know they are in flesh and spirit the sons of the heroes of by-gone days and that they will not fail their country in the hour of need.

"The flag of the United States has never been lowered in defeat and it thrills us with pride to know that it has never been defended by better men than our soldiers of today.

"It is, therefore, mindful of their great sacrifice, but with utmost confidence in the future that we send them a message of love and good will. Some of these days they are going to return to us, heroes of the great war of 1917. Until that day comes their image will be ever in the minds and in the hearts of their countrymen."

ARMISTICE SIGNED; WORLD WAR ENDS

Announcement of Signing of Armistice Is Made by an Official of the State Department at 2:50 Monday Morning—Hostilities Ceased at 11 o'Clock, French Time—Terms to be Made Public Later

Washington, November 11.—The world war ended this morning at 6 o'clock Washington time, 11 o'clock Paris time. The armistice was signed by the German representatives at midnight. This announcement was made by the state department at 2:50 o'clock this morning. The announcement was made verbally by an official of the state department in this form:

"The armistice has been signed. It was signed at 5 o'clock a. m., Paris time, and hostilities will cease at 11 o'clock this morning, Paris time."

The terms of the armistice it was announced, will not be made public until later. Military men here, however, regard it as certain that they include:

"Immediate retirement of the German military forces from France, Belgium and Alsace-Lorraine.

"Disarming and demobolization of the German armies. Occupation by the allied and American forces of such strategic points in Germany as will make impossible a renewal of hostilities. Delivery of part of the German high seas fleet, and a certain number of submarines to the allied and American forces.

"Disarmament of all other German warships under supervision of the allied and American navies, which will guard them.

"Occupation of the principal German naval bases by sea forces of the victorious nations.

"Release of allied and American soldiers, sailors and civilians held prisoners in Germany without such reciprocal action by the associated governments."

There was no information as to the circumstances under which the armistice was signed but since the German courier did not reach German military headquarters until 10 o'clock yesterday morning, French time, it was generally assumed here that the German envoys within the French lines had been instructed by wireless to sign the terms.

Forty-seven hours had been required for the courier to reach German headquarters for the examination of the terms and a decision. It was regarded as possible, however, that the decision may have been made at Berlin and instructions transmitted from there by the new German government.

Germany had been given until 11 o'clock this morning, French time, 6 o'clock Washington time, to accept. So hostilities will end at the hour set by Marshal Foch for a decision by Germany for peace or for continuation of the war.

The momentous news that the armistice had been signed was telephoned to the white house for transmission to the president a few minutes before it was given to the newspaper correspondents. Later it was said that there would be no statement from the white house at this time.

SOCIALISTS SET UP REPUBLIC IN BERLIN

MANIFESTO PROMISES GOVERNMENT FOR THE PEOPLE.

Soldiers Join Revolution and Is Headed by Friedrich Ebert, a Socialist Member of the Reichstag, Who Promises to Bring About a Speedy Peace.

Berlin, Nov. 11.—The German people's government has been instituted in the greater part of Berlin. The garrison has gone over to the government.

The workmen's and soldiers' council has declared a general strike.

Troops and machine guns have been placed at the disposal of the council.

The text of the statement issued by the people's government reads:

"In the course of the forenoon of Saturday the formation of a new German people's government was initiated. The greater part of the Berlin garrison and other troops stationed there temporarily went over to the new government.

Will Not Fire on People.

"The leaders of the deputations of the social democratic party declared that they would not shoot against the people. They said they would, in accord with the people's government, intercede in favor of the maintenance of order. Thereupon, in the offices and public buildings, the guards which had been stationed there were withdrawn.

"The business of the imperial chancellor is being carried on by the social-democratic deputy, Herr Ebert.

"It is presumed that apart from the representatives of the recent majority group three independent social democrats will enter the future government."

Calls General Strike.

In an extra edition of the Vorwaerts, the central organ of the social democratic party in Germany, the following call for a general strike was published:

"The workmen's and soldiers' council of Berlin has decided upon a general strike. All the factories are at a standstill.

"The necessary administration of the people will be maintained. A large part of the garrison has been closed and bodies of troops and machine guns have been placed at the disposal of the workmen's and soldiers' council.

"Long Live Social Republic."

"The movement will be guided in common by the democratic party of Germany and the independent social democratic party of Germany. The workmen's and soldiers' council will take charge of the maintenance of quiet and order. Long live the social republic!

"WORKMEN'S AND SOLDIERS' COUNCIL."

From all parts of the German empire news is being received regarding similar revolutions which almost everywhere remain within the bounds of economic order.

Incidents of Strike Described.

With regard to the incidents of November 9 in Berlin the semi-official telegraph bureau, working under the control of the workmen's and soldiers' council, issued the following report:

"This morning at nine o'clock the workers of the greatest industrial undertakings commenced a general strike.

"Processions hastened from all the suburbs to the center of the city. Red flags were carried at the head of the processions in which marched armed soldiers of all classes.

"The first procession arrived from the Ackerstrasse and Brunnestrassee. As a preliminary the soldiers and officers were urged to remove their cockades and epaulettes. In the majority of cases this took place voluntarily.

Workmen and Soldiers Fraternize.

"There was a general fraternization of soldiers and workmen. The workmen penetrated the barracks, where they received an enthusiastic reception from the soldiers.

"The military occupants of factories mingled in common with the workers, left the works and treated with them in common.

"So far as known the only clash between the masses and armed forces took place on the occupation of the so-called 'Cockshafer' barracks. In that was a guard of fusiliers, but only two officers fired.

"Three persons were killed and one was injured. This is to be regretted.

"The taking possession of a majority of the public buildings and establishments was completed without difficulty, once it was clear that the military had gone over to the people."

Victory for the People—Scheidemann.

Deputy Scheidemann (leader of the majority Socialists in the reichstag) in a speech, said:

"The kaiser and the crown prince have abdicated. It is a splendid victory for the German people.

"Herr Ebert has been charged with the formation of a new government, in which all shades of the Social Democratic party are to participate.

"Only decrees from the government bearing the signature of Herr Ebert have validity. Only orders from the minister of war bearing the countersignature of the Social Democrat, acting as assistant, are official."

Deputy Scheidemann exhorted the the crowd to keep calm and to avoid incidents.

Deputy Tharr and some soldiers spoke from a motor lorry. A delegate from the corps of officers of the guard battalion announced that the officers were on the side of the people. Stormy applause and jubilation accompanied the speeches.

Socialist Ebert Takes Control.

Copenhagen, Nov. 11.—It is officially announced from Berlin that the war ministry has placed itself at the disposal of Friedrich Ebert, the Socialist leader whose appointment as imperial chancellor was forecast yesterday by the decree of Prince Maximilian. This action was for the purpose of assuring the provisioning of the army and assisting in the solution of demobilization problems.

Friedrich Ebers, the Socialist leader, has been appointed imperial chancellor. He has issued a proclamation saying that he plans to form a people's government which will endeavor to bring about speedy peace.

MARKING GRAVES IS TASK FOR HEROES

MEN IN REGISTRATION SERVICE WORK CALMLY UNDER FIRE ON THE BATTLEFIELD.

COL. PIERCE IS THEIR CHIEF

Aviators Driven by Storm Land in Florida Everglades and Are Rescued by Seminole Indians—Government Gets Many New Hospitals.

(From Committee on Public Information.)

Washington.—Announcement from France that all American dead are to be returned to this country for permanent burial adds interest to the story of how the graves of these heroes are marked and recorded. This work is done by the grave registration service, which is co-operating with the Red Cross in photographing graves and, when practicable, in distributing these photographs to the families and relatives of the dead.

The graves registration service is a unit of the quartermaster corps. Each unit of this service is composed of one captain, one lieutenant and 50 enlisted men. There are now 14 of these units with the American expeditionary forces in France, under command of Lieut. Col. Charles C. Pierce. Colonel Pierce is a retired chaplain, a major of the regular army, and was pastor of an Episcopal church in Philadelphia when the present war began. As he had been in charge of similar work in the Philippines, he volunteered for this important task upon the organization of the graves registration service. He has been awarded a promotion for his zealous performance of the duties falling to him.

In a letter which Lieutenant Colonel Pierce has written to Maj. H. R. Lemly, chief of the cemeterial branch, quartermaster corps, and which is quoted in part here, is to be had a glimpse of a work that blends mercy and heroism.

"All that the censors will pass in the way of news concerning this furious drive in the vast triangular arena between Soissons, Chateau-Thierry and Reims has already been given you in the papers," writes Colonel Pierce. "But the work that has befallen my department is one of the unpublished chapters of history. Suffice it to say that my men have displayed a splendid sort of heroism—worthy of the reddest blood stock in the world—and that I have had occasion to recommend a number of them for promotion, and some of them for the bestowal of the Distinguished Service cross. . . .

"Can you fancy a lot of men going calmly about their duty under bursting shells and bombs that excavate a cellar every time they strike the ground—going about to minister to the dead, laying out cemeteries and putting up crosses over the graves of their valorous and fallen comrades as fast as the grenades of hate tear them down? Then you will know the place of these brave lads of mine, who worry when they see me, lest I may have it in mind to move them to a safer place.

"And the men who are going over the top! Ah, you will need rapid transit to keep up with them! For they have the crusaders' spirit and they fill the gaps of the fallen and move on with a rush that the Hun cannot understand. . . . . They will win and they have no other thought. Often I have the privilege of preaching to them as a layman; and I give you my word that I never looked into such faces before. Perhaps I have seen as comely features, but there is a fire in all these eyes and the light of a sublime consecration such as the world has never seen save in the faces of martyrs who deemed it an honor to die for a cause."

The department of agriculture has inaugurated a campaign to increase the use of dehydrated fruits and vegetables, which compare favorably for ordinary consumption with the fresh article. As indicating the need and value of this campaign, the food administration calls attention to the fact that about 8,000,000 pounds of Irish potatoes were "thrown to the dump" in New York city alone last January, after having been frosted and then permitted to rot in transit.

The war department has already recognized the importance of dehydrated produce. The army has purchased and used 14,000,000 pounds of dehydrated foodstuffs, costing about $3,000,000, and in the last few weeks has placed orders with Canadian and American dehydrating plants for more than 40,000,000 pounds to be manufactured and delivered between now and July 1, 1919. These orders represent about $10,000,000, and, include principally potatoes, carrots, onions and a small supply of soup mixtures. There are eight different vegetables in the soup mixtures.

On a single day recently the board of review in the office of the quartermaster general approved orders and contracts aggregating $20,621,176. Among the items purchased were crowbars, axes, trench mirrors, cloth, motortrucks, motorcycles, ginger, bacon, ham, cheese, nails, salmon, flour, shovels, butter, horseshoes, typewriters, paint, hay, oats, cinnamon, nutmeg, sugar, beans, catchup, evaporated milk, flannel shirts, tomatoes, screwdrivers, wooden wheels, tires, tents, razors, baking powder, pencils and meat saws.

Driven by a storm from a height of 8,000 feet into the Everglades of Florida, Lieutenant Smith, an aviator stationed at Carlstrom field, Miami, was forced to add to his startling experiences the prospect of starvation in a trackless swamp, infested with snakes and alligators. He and his passenger, Sergeant O'Connor, were rescued by Seminole Indians, after having wandered through the Everglades for two days without food or water.

The airplane in which Lieutenant Smith and Sergeant O'Connor were attempting to fly over the Everglades was submerged in the mud and water and somewhat damaged, but later was put in order and sailed forth once more, to the great wonder of the Seminoles.

Lieutenant Smith had undertaken the work of photographing a shorter line or flight over the Everglades to Fort Meyers, and was on his mission at the time of his adventure. He had reached an altitude of 7,000 feet above the great swamp when he observed a storm approaching from the south and changed his course to the southwest in an effort to avoid it. Finding this impossible, he veered to the west and attempted to climb above it. At 8,000 feet, however, he encountered a terrific wind from the north which tossed the plane and twice turned it almost completely on its back.

The motor cut out twice and Lieutenant Smith had to put the plane in a nose dive to clear itself. Suddenly the machine broke through the clouds and the swamps appeared just below. The motor was still giving trouble and the pilot was compelled to land. He continued his flight along the shallow and open places fringing the swamp, but the gas gave out and he came down 48 miles west of Miami. In the landing Sergeant O'Connor's lips were cut and he was bruised about the body and legs. Lieutenant Smith was only slightly bruised.

States, municipalities and private concerns have given to the government free use of hospitals and other institutions that will accommodate more than 10,000 sick and wounded soldiers, and the war department has leased other public and private buildings that will add facilities for the care of 0,000 more.

To fit some of these buildings for use as hospitals alterations costing about $905,000 will have to be made. These alterations will be undertaken at once, so that most of the buildings will be ready for occupancy by January 1, 1919.

The St. Louis sanitarium, one of the finest buildings of its kind in the country, is among the institutions which have been made available to the government without charge. Only minor alterations will be necessary to provide accommodations for 3,000 soldier patients.

Other institutions which have been offered free of rental to the government for the purpose are the Ohio Hospital for the Criminal Insane at Lima; the State School for the Deaf, Columbus; the State hospital at Norfolk, Mass.; a model factory at Cleveland and a completely appointed hospital built by Henry Ford in Detroit.

Vaccination against pneumonia is available for every officer, enlisted man and employee of the army in the United States, and it is believed by medical officers that if they avail themselves of this protective remedy the prevalence and deadliness of this disease will be far less this winter than last year.

One of the most severe tests of the vaccine was its administration to 12,000 volunteers at one of the army camps. During the following ten weeks until these troops went overseas not a single case of pneumonia developed among them. In the last two years pneumonia has caused more deaths than any other disease.

The vaccine is for administration to healthy persons to prevent the development of certain types of pneumonia. It is not intended for treatment after the disease has been contracted. It is in no sense a cure for pneumonia.

Five millions of rations for American fighters in France are now being packed and ready for shipment. They are to be placed in air-tight containers and then crated in heavy wood boxes. In each container there is sufficient food for 24 men for one day.

The packing of this ration is designed to protect the soldier from hardships in the trenches or at sea. The selection of canned meats illustrates the care with which the food products of this ration are packed. The tinned meat packing methods of the United States have been studied by experts so that only the best products of the packers will be chosen.

In addition to meats, the ration will include cigarettes sufficient for a day's smoke for 24 men; salmon, soluble coffee, salt, pepper and hard bread. Practically all of these are packed separately in air-tight containers to resist gas attack.

To provide speedy and efficient relief for American soldiers and sailors who may be in distress through the torpedoing or wrecking of ships, the American Red Cross has organized a bureau of emergency service in England to co-operate with the army and the navy and with American consuls.

It was disclosed by the recent campaign in behalf of the fourth Liberty loan that 40,496 persons are employed in the various branches of the war department in Washington. Of this number 6,795 are in the office of the chief of staff.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Teacher of English Bible in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1913, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR NOVEMBER 17

JACOB FLEEING FROM HIS ANGRY BROTHER.

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 28:10-22.

GOLDEN TEXT—He hath not dealt with us after our sins, nor rewarded us according to our iniquities.—Psalms 103:10.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL—Genesis 27:16-28:9.

The motive which moved Rebekah to send Jacob away was a mixed one. She realized that Esau's anger was hot against Jacob, even to the point where he was likely to kill him. She further knew that justice would have to be meted out to him, and thus she would be bereft of them both. Then, too, she realized that if Jacob remained in that land he would likely marry a heathen woman and thus defeat God's purpose regarding the covenant nation. This latter she pressed upon Isaac as a motive for sending him away.

I. Jacob's Flight (v. 10).

He was fleeing from his outraged brother. His flight was necessary to save his life. He seems not to have gone the common road, so as to be less likely overtaken by Esau, should he pursue him. Through forced march he reaches Bethel, a spot nearly fifty miles away, by nightfall.

II. Jacob's Vision (vv. 11-17).

Jacob's soul was peculiarly tested. He had to leave home and mother. On the way to Haran night overtakes him, and he is obliged to sleep in a field with a stone for his pillow and the canopy of heaven for a covering. It was under such circumstances that the Lord gave him the wonderful vision at Bethel. Many times the rough experiences and severe trials of life help us on toward God. Luxury and heavenly visions do not usually go together. This finds illustration in John on Patmos; Stephen looking into heaven while being stoned, and John Bunyan in Bedford jail.

1. He saw a ladder reaching from earth to heaven (v. 12).

This suggests a means of communication between earth and heaven, between man and God. It showed Jacob that in spite of his awful sin there was a way to heaven for him. Jesus Christ is the ladder connecting earth and heaven for us (John 1:51; 14:6; Hebrews 10:19, 20). In the incarnation Jesus Christ descended to earth's lowest depth and made a way upon which human feet might climb to heaven. Fortunate are they who in the times of earth's trials discern this ladder!

2. He saw angels of God upon the ladder (v. 12).

They were ascending and descending upon this ladder. These angels were the divine helpers to render needed assistance along life's way. Though unseen, God's angels guide and protect us on our earthly pilgrimage. They ascend unto the Father with our needs, and descend unto us with God's reply. Christ is a real man, and so can identify himself with us; he is the very God, really divine, and so is able to lift us to God and secure our reconciliation with him.

3. He saw the Lord standing above the ladder (vv. 13-17).

To show Jacob that the ladder did not merely reach into space, the personal God appeared and talked with him. His message is filled with infinite grace. (1) He declared the God of Abraham and Isaac (v. 13), thus assuring Jacob that the same hand that guided his fathers was over him. (2) He renewed the covenant as to the land (v. 13). Though Jacob was now fleeing from the land, yet the covenant would not fail, for Jacob and his seed should possess it. (3) Assured him of a numerous seed (v. 14). They would spread abroad to the north, and south, and east, and west. (4) The divine presence with the wandering Jacob (v. 15). Though he had sinned and was reaping what he had sown, yet God was with him.

III. Jacob's Vow (vv. 18-22).

God's gracious visitation provoked Jacob to make a vow. Each sight of God should cause us to renew our obligation to him. His vow included three things: (1) Dedication of himself to God (v. 12). This is the first thing to do. Our gifts are an abomination while the life is withheld from God. (2) Worship established (vv. 18, 19). "This stone shall be God's house." Worship always follows dedication of one's self to God. There is personal communion between God and those who worship him. (3) Consecration of his substance, of his possessions (v. 22). Those who have fellowship with God recognize God's claim upon their possessions. God's grace should constrain us to give of our substance to him.

Meditation.

Meditation is one way of handling the Gospel history. Instead of a vague, half-remembered, less than half-comprehended, story, the life of Jesus, steadily meditated on, passes into the life of the Christian, by an insensible but real transfusion.—Rev. H. P. Liddon, D. D.

A Spiritual Relation.

True friendship is a spiritual relation. God reveals himself to us in many ways through our different friends.—E. V. H

THIS WEAK, NERVOUS MOTHER

Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Restored Her Health.

Philadelphia, Pa.—"I was very weak, always tired, my back ached, and I felt sickly most of the time. I went to a doctor and he said I had nervous indigestion, which added to my weak condition kept me worrying most of the time—and he said if I could not stop that, I could not get well. I heard so much about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound my husband wanted me to try it. I took it for a week and felt a little better. I kept it up for three months, and I feel fine and can eat anything now without distress or nervousness."—Mrs. J. WORTHLINE, 2842 North Taylor St., Philadelphia Pa.

The majority of mothers nowadays overdo, there are so many demands upon their time and strength; the result is invariably a weakened, run-down, nervous condition with headaches, backache, irritability and depression—and soon more serious ailments develop. It is at such periods in life that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will restore a normal healthy condition, as it did to Mrs. Worthline.

Carolyn of the Corners

BY RUTH BELMORE ENDICOTT

Copyright, [illegible], by Dodd, Mead & Company, Inc.

CAROLYN CANNOT FACE PROSPECT OF LOSING HER ONLY FRIEND AND COMPANION.

Synopsis.—Her father and mother reported lost at sea when the Dunraven, on which they had sailed for Europe, was sunk, Carolyn May Cameron—Hannah's Carolyn—is sent from New York to her bachelor uncle, Joseph Stagg, at the Corners. The reception given her by her uncle is not very enthusiastic. Carolyn is also chilled by the stern demeanor of Aunty Rose, Uncle Joe's housekeeper. Stagg is dismayed when he learns from a lawyer friend of his brother-in-law that Carolyn has been left practically penniless and consigned to his care as guardian. Carolyn learns of the estrangement between her uncle and his one-time sweetheart, Amanda Parlow, and the cause of the bitterness between the two families.

The mole in question lived under a piece of rock wall near the garden fence.

When Uncle Joe came home to dinner on one particular Saturday he walked down to the corner of the garden fence, and there saw the havoc Prince had wrought. In following the line of the mole's last tunnel he had worked his way under the picket fence and had torn up two currant bushes and done some damage in the strawberry patch.

"And the worst of it is," grumbled the hardware dealer, "he never caught the mole. That mongrel really isn't worth a bag of dornicks to sink him in the brook. But that's what he's going to get this very evening when I come home. I won't stand for him a day longer."

Carolyn May positively turned pale as she crouched beside the now chained-up Prince, both arms about his rough neck. He licked her cheek. Fortunately, he could not understand everything that was said to him, therefore the pronouncement of this terrible sentence did not agitate him an atom.

Carolyn May sat for a long time under the tree beside the sleeping dog and thought how different this life at The Corners was from that she had lived with her father and mother in the city home.

If only that big ship, the Dunraven, had not sailed away with her papa and her mamma!

Carolyn May had been very brave on that occasion. She had gone ashore with Mrs. Price and Edna after her mother's last clinging embrace and her father's husky "Good-by, daughter," with scarcely a tear.

Of course she had been brave! Mamma would return in a few weeks, and then, after a time, papa would likewise come back—and oh! so rosy and stout!

And then, in two weeks, came the fatal news of the sinking of the Dunraven and the loss of all but a small part of her crew and passengers.

Vaguely these facts had become known to Carolyn May. She never spoke of them. They did not seem real to the little girl.

But now, sitting beside the condemned Prince—her companion and only real comforter during these weeks of her orphanhood—the little girl felt bitterly her loneliness and grief.

The Little Girl Felt Bitterly Her Loneliness and Grief.

If Uncle Joe did as he had threatened, what should she do? There seemed to be no place for her and Prince to run away to.

"I'm quite sure I don't want to live," thought Carolyn May dismally. "If papa and mamma and Prince are all dead—why! there aren't enough other folks left in the world to make it worth while living in, I don't believe. If Prince isn't going to be alive, then I don't want to be alive, either."

By and by Prince began to get very uneasy. It was long past his dinner hour, and every time he heard the screen door slam he jumped up and gazed eagerly and with cocked ears and wagging tail in that direction.

"You poor thing, you," said Carolyn May at last. "I s'pose you are hungry. It isn't going to do you a bit of good to eat; but you don't know it. I'll ask Aunty Rose if she has something for you."

She got up wearily and went across the yard. Aunty Rose stood just inside the screen door.

"Don't you want any dinner, Car'lyn May?" she asked.

"No, ma'am. I guess I'd better not eat," said the child.

"Why not?"

"'Cause my stomach's so trembly. I just know I couldn't keep anything down, even if I could swallow it. But Prince'll eat his, please. He—he don't know any better."

"Tut, tut!" murmured the woman. "He's the most sensible of the two of you, I declare."

The minutes of that afternoon dragged by in most doleful procession. There was no idea in the little girl's mind that Uncle Joe might change his intention and Prince be saved from the watery grave promised him. When she saw the hardware dealer come into the yard almost an hour earlier than their usual supper time she was not surprised. Nor did she think of pleading with him for the dog's life.

The litle girl watched him askance. Mr. Stagg came directly through the yard, stopping only at the shed for a moment. There he secured a strong potato sack, and with it trailing from his hand went half-way up the knoll to where there was a heap of stones. He stooped down and began to select some of these, putting them in the bag.

This was too much for Carolyn May. With a fearful look at Uncle Joe's uncompromising shoulders, she went to the tree where Prince was chained. Exchanging the chain for the leather leash with which she always led him about, the little girl guided the mongrel across the yard and around the corner of the house.

Her last backward glance assured her that the hardware dealer had not observed her. Quickly and silently she led Prince to the front gate, and they went out together into the dusty road.

"I—I know we oughtn't to," whispered Carolyn May to her canine friend, "but I feel I've just got to save you, Prince. I—I can't see you drownd-ed dead like that!"

She turned the nearest corner and went up the road towards the little closed, gable-roofed cottage where Aunty Rose had lived before she had come to be Uncle Joe's housekeeper.

Carolyn May had already peered over into the small yard of the cottage and had seen that Mrs. Kennedy still kept the flower-beds weeded and the walks neat and the grass plot trimmed. But the window shutters were barred and the front door built up with boards.

Carolyn May went in through the front gate and sat down on the doorstep, while Prince dropped to a comfortable attitude beside her. The dog slept. The little girl ruminated.

She would not go back to Uncle Joe's—no, indeed! She did not know just what she would do when dark should come, but Prince should not be sacrificed to her uncle's wrath.

A voice, low, sweet, yet startling, aroused her.

"What are you doing there, little girl?"

Both runaways started, but neither of them was disturbed by the appearance of her who had accosted Carolyn May.

"Oh, Miss Mandy!" breathed the little girl, and thought that the carpenter's daughter had never looked so pretty.

"What are you doing there?" repeated Miss Parlow.

"We—we've run away," said Carolyn May at last. She could be nothing but frank; it was her nature.

"Run away!" repeated the pretty woman. "You don't mean that?"

"Yes, ma'am, I have. And Prince. From Uncle Joe and Aunty Rose," Carolyn May assured her, nodding her head with each declaration.

"Oh, my dear, what for?" asked Miss Amanda.

So Carolyn May told her—and with tears.

Meanwhile the woman came into the yard and sat beside the child on the step. With her arm about the little girl, Miss Amanda snuggled her up close, wiping the tears away with her own handkerchief.

"I just can't have poor Prince drownd-ed," Carolyn May sobbed. "I'd want to be drownd-ed myself, too."

"I know, dear. But do you really believe your Uncle Joseph would do such a thing? Would he drown your dog?"

"I—I saw him putting the stones in the bag," sobbed Carolyn May. "And he said he would."

"But he said it when he was angry, dear. We often say things when we are angry—more's the pity!—which we do not mean, and for which we are bitterly sorry afterwards. I am sure, Carolyn May, that your Uncle Joe has no intention of drowning your dog."

"Oh, Miss Amanda! Are you positive?"

"Positive! I know Joseph Stagg. He was never yet cruel to any dumb creature. Go ask him yourself, Carolyn May. Whatever else he may be, he is not a hater of helpless and dumb animals."

"Miss Amanda," cried Carolyn May, with clasped hands, "you—you are just lifting an awful big lump off my heart! I'll run and ask him right away."

She raced with the barking Prince back to the Stagg premises. Mr. Stagg had just finished filling in with the stones the trench Prince had dug under the garden fence.

With Her Arms About the Little Girl, Miss Amanda Snuggled Her Up Close.

"There," he grunted. "That dratted dog won't dig this hole any bigger, I reckon. What's the matter with you, Car'lyn?"

"Are—are you going to drown'd Princey, Uncle Joe? If—if you do, it just seems to me, I—I shall die!"

He looked up at her searchingly.

"Humph! is that mongrel so all-important to your happiness that you want to die if he does?" demanded the man.

"Yes, Uncle Joe."

"Humph!" ejaculated the hardware dealer again. "I believe you think more of that dog than you do of me."

"Yes, Uncle Joe."

The frank answer hit Mr. Stagg harder than he would have cared to acknowledge.

"Why?" he queried.

"Because Prince never said a word to hurt me in his life!" said Carolyn May, sobbing.

The man was silenced. He felt in his inmost heart that he had been judged.

CHAPTER VI.

Prince Awakens The Corners.

Camp-meeting time was over, and the church at The Corners was to open for its regular Sunday services.

"Both Satan and the parson have had a vacation," said Mr. Stagg, "and now they can tackle each other again and see which'll get the strangle hold 'twixt now and revival time."

"You should not say such things, especially before the child, Joseph Stagg," admonished Aunty Rose.

Carolyn May, however, seemed not to have heard Uncle Joe's pessimistic remark; she was too greatly excited by the prospect of Sunday school. And the very next week-day school would begin!

By this first week in September the little girl was quite settled in her new home at The Corners. Prince was still a doubtful addition to the family, both Uncle Joe and Aunty Rose plainly having misgivings about him. But in regard to the little girl herself, the hardware merchant and the housekeeper were of one opinion, even though they did not admit it to each other.

Prince proves himself a real canine hero and makes himself "solid" with all the people at the Corners. His exploit is described in the next installment.

The Crime of Profiteering

By HAMLIN GARLAND
of The Vigilantes

To my mind, one of the noblest phases of this war is the outburst of generous giving on the part of the great merchants and manufacturers of America. It would be an injustice not to admit this.

The impulse which leads a man to forego a salary of seventy-five thousand dollars per annum or to neglect an enormous business for a position on the government roll at one dollar per year is magnificent. I for one am not disposed to cavil or criticize by saying: "It is easy to give up a salary of that size because it argues a wealth which is sufficient without it." I am willing to grant the fine spirit which leads men like Baruch, Rosenwald, Crane and House to give of their time and money and genius to the cause for which we are fighting. My only care is to see that I give in the same proportion and in the same mood.

Without doubt there is less of conscienceless profiteering in this war than in either the Civil war or the Spanish war, but having granted this, we are still confronted with the fact that there are in America today a great many men seeking ways to levy tribute on those who are unable to elude their demands.

No Objection to Fair Profit.

The shopkeeper no less than the manufacturer, the pork-packer as well as the cotton grower, are in this attack on the pockets of the consumer. The process in the case of manufactured articles is simple. Take, for convenient example, shoes. It is true that hides are somewhat higher, that labor is costlier, but as a matter of fact a few cents will pay for the difference in the cost of the shoes on which the retailer now asks a profit of four dollars. He has doubled the price, not because he must but because he can. This is a crime and should be punished as such.

No one will object to a fair profit on the part of the manufacturer and the dealer, but to this remorseless profiteering the government must put a stop. It is taking an unfair advantage of purchasers who are helpless to protest—or whose individual protests carry no weight.

The profiteering principle extends to the smallest articles—a lead pencil, for another instance. Pencils have gone from five to ten cents not because the extra lead costs a fraction of a cent more, but because to raise the price from five cents to a dime is the dealer's notion of a proper war profit.

There is some excuse for a salaried man or a wage earner who demands an increase in pay, for the leaping cost of living is forcing such demands, but there is no valid excuse for the man who merely seeks to increase his profits. It is a crime against the helpless when the dealers and manufacturers deliberately conspire against the families of the soldiers who have gone away to fight against a military despotism. Their families must be protected against the profiteer at home.

Condemn the Profiteers.

Much can be done by the government, by laws rigidly enforced, but still more can be done by a system of ostracism, of social condemnation. We can add to the rising spirit of generous forbearance by recognizing it wherever we find it, and we can make profiteering odious, as well as against the law, by openly condemning those who practice it.

To me there is something peculiarly repulsive in the greedy spirit of the profiteer. I can excuse the German spy, for it is conceivable that he is working under orders like a soldier, I can forgive the enemy alien, for after all his heart is German or Austrian, but for the man who takes advantage of his fellow citizens in time of war I have a deep hatred. He is to me a traitor to all that is fine and generous in American manhood, an enemy citizen doing the work of the kaiser quite as effectively as though he carried a gun. His action is a crime and should be so treated by society and by the department of justice.

These are times when bravery and generosity are in the ascendant. As the war goes on the need of these great virtues will increase, but also and alas! the opportunity for profiteering will augment; and unless some check is placed upon it we will all feel the pinch of the profiteering greedy claw. We must back up the government in its work, but we should also characterize clearly and strongly our hatred of the robber no matter where he may be found.

Labor and the War

By ROBERT GRANT
Of The Vigilantes

(Robert Grant, judge of the Probate Court of Boston, author of Unleavened Bread, The Chippendales, An Average Man, and other novels, and one of the overseers of Harvard University, is one of the most distinguished members of the American Academy of Arts and Letters.)

Only two classes have been benefited financially by the war: the people with material or products essential to its conduct and the men and women whose earning power has doubled or trebled through the departure overseas of the young, able-bodied men of the nation. Some large sums have been made by the dealers in supplies which the government required; but congress may be counted on to take care of surplus profits henceforth until the return of peace. Yet for every profiteer (to prepetuate an ugly word for lack of a better) in munitions or merchandise there are a hundred thousand working men and women who are on easy street for the first time in their lives because of the advance in wages. While people on a fixed income, such as clerks, school teachers and letter carriers, are having difficulty in making two ends meet, numerous employees of one kind or another are, comparatively speaking, in clover.

The sensation is an agreeable one and no one begrudges it to them; certainly not in the first flush of prosperity when the desire to buy things, which they have never been able to afford and always hankered after, makes the dollars burn in their pockets. One has only to inquire in order to ascertain that business in many lines is going on as usual, not through the purchases of old customers but of a brand new set intent on diverse minor luxuries that one associates with a full purse.

The Heyday of Labor.

In a sense this war period is the heyday of labor, for the reason that an army of people of small means are better off than they ever were before. But if these wage earners are to emulate the patriotism of their brothers who are giving their lives magnificently in order to crush soul-stifling militarism and safeguard democracy, their watchword must be thrift, not indulgence; they must inculcate saving, not spending. Except by rigorous individual self denial and the dedication of the savings of the mass to the cause of world liberty the war cannot be won. We are all of us in the trenches or can be if we choose by doing what the government asks of us, and the slacker is he or she who having the opportunity for service is too sordid or light-minded to rise to it.

In the first place we are asked to forego or to be abstemious in using certain foodstuffs so that our soldiers and their allies may have all that they require. This is not much of a hardship for anybody. Next, everyone is implored to be as economical as he or she can in order to aid the government to raise the gigantic sums necessary for carrying on the war. This is no great hardship either. It is a war of endurance, the result of which will hinge on individual self-sacrifice; victory is impossible without co-operation in saving by the entire nation. The mass is not urged to give, but to save. Millions are being given by the wealthy to maintain the various war charities. All that is asked of the rank and file is that they shall not put into their mouths or on their backs the extra money which the shortage of labor enables them to demand. When they fail to live up to this they cease to be patriots and become profiteerers. The next best proof of loyalty to laying down one's life is to save. And what an easy thing that is compared to going over the top or facing a bombardment.

No One Should Obstruct.

Finally, the government asks that no one shall obstruct the winning of the war. Here is the opportunity for labor to be of immense service or great injury. If the men and women whose pay already far exceeds what they have ever earned before choose to hold up the national industries in order to obtain more, they are false to their brothers in France and range themselves with the enemy. They have the power to do so, for unlike the fighting men and the railroads they have not been conscripted. We hear many prophecies of the startling changes that are to come with victory, chief among which is the assumption that the day of the capitalistic profiteerer is over. We are told that the dawn of a new economic era is in sight. If this be true, labor's stake in this most terrible and relentless of wars is greater than that of any other class. If greed and indifference prevail Germany will win; for a "draw" would be tantamount to a resumption of militarism and the indefinite postponement of the social democratic program. Without the whole-hearted aid of the workers at home our brave men at the front will be powerless to conquer. On the anniversary which marks the holiday of industrial industry this should be borne in mind. And, further, it may be said that a world quickened to its depths in its resolution to extirpate overlords is in no mood to tolerate the substitution of one tyrant for another.

DISCORD NOW IS DISLOYALTY

By LE ROY HURON KELSEY
of the Vigilantes.

If perchance you find a few
Who refuse or fail to do
Things to show that they are true,
Scrutinize 'em!

Should they try to cause unrest,
Doubting whether plans are best,
Or that we can meet the test,
Stigmatize 'em!

Should they seek to profiteer,
Or attempt to scoff and jeer,
And mayhap to interfere,
Penalize 'em!

Should they hurl reproach or blame
On our government's fair name,
Or by vicious lies inflame,
Pulverize 'em!

Temperance Notes

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

KEEPING UP WITH THE TIMES.

From the Emergency Fleet News we learn that the Coast Shipbuilding company of Portland, Ore., has started a new fashion in the ceremony of launching. H. E. Pennell, president of the company tells the story thus:

"When about to launch the 'Cabura,' the first of this month, we bethought ourselves of the waste connected with the following of the time-honored custom of christening a new ship by breaking a bottle of wine across her bows, and although we would advocate nothing to detract from the pleasure and satisfaction of putting a good new ship into the water, we thought at this particular time it would be more appropriate to utilize the money usually spent for a ship's christening for the purpose of aiding the distresses of the dependent children of French and Belgians, and, instead of bedecking the ship with ribbons and smashing the customary bottle of wine, we took the stand which has been placed in the gateway of our yard, containing a slotted milk bottle into which our employees drop from time to time pennies and small change for these dependent children, placed it on the stand at the bow of the ship, attached a substantial piece of money to a small ribbon, placed this money inside of the bottle and drew the ribbon through the slot and tacked it to the bow of the ship.

"The young lady who was chosen sponsor for this launching, instead of breaking the bottle of wine when the ship started to move, cut the ribbon, which, figuratively speaking, releases the ship from its attachment to the land, and while she sped upon her way to aid our men at the battle front, she left behind her as an omen of good luck and Godspeed a bit of substantial good cheer to those who have been left to suffer while their parents had gone forth in their protection, as well as the country for which they were offering their all.

"We are mentioning this circumstance thinking it might be of material help in the raising of funds for the care of these dependent children, if the builders of ships generally saw fit to adopt this during the war period as a universal custom."

AMERICA'S ANSWER.

Great Britain is deeply impressed with America's solution of the conservation problem as regards beer. The Sunday Evening Telegram of London thus comments:

"No more beer will be brewed in the United States after November; that is a simple if drastic way of answering the question of bread or beer. As America sends us grain, it looks as if she is closing her breweries that ours may remain open. It is very doubtful if, supposing the circumstances were reversed, we should do the same for her; but it is a notable example of the determination of the United States to let nothing stand in the way of carrying on the war."

JOINED TO A BETTER MAN.

A recent cartoon depicts Miss Barley-Rye turning her back upon Mr. Beer Barrel and walking off with Mr. Flour Barrel who wears a military hat and carries a gun. She is saying to the jilted B. B.:

No, thanks, Mr. Brew; I'm through with you,
I'm joined to a better man
Who treats me white to my great delight,
A man who can work and a man who can fight.
I'm done with bottle and can.

Too long has the yield of my barley field
Been brewed into deadly beer.
I shall now turn to flour, I'm the maid of the hour;
From being a curse I now become power.
I'm through with you, sir. Do you hear?

TO STOP WHISKY.

Whisky will not be dead or ended with the law that makes the traffic illegal. The fight must be continued against illegal whisky, the vilest, most dangerous kind. Only constant vigilance, public co-operation and great forces of detectives can deal adequately with that danger. The best weapon against whisky is thorough understanding of the character of the whisky poisons.—Chicago Herald-Examiner.

ALCOHOL AND DEFENSE

An order issued by the commander-in-chief of the Allied armies, according to L'Abstinence (July 15, 1918), forbids the consumption and sale of "alcohol and alcoholic drinks" in the army zone. The order states that "Everyone must understand that all of this which is capable of diminishing the physical and moral strength of our army becomes, in the face of the enemy, a veritable crime against national defense."

CHILD CONSERVATION

After one year under prohibition in South Dakota, Superintendent Stuckeman of the State Children's Home reports that "For the first time during twenty-five years of our Children's Home society not a single child has been admitted to its custody on account of booze playing a prominent part in establishing its dependency."

Thirteen thousand abstainers are equal to 15,000 nonabstainers. Give me a teetotal army and I will lead it anywhere.—Lord Roberts.

Treasury Certificates Mature

The government bond department of the federal reserve bank of Chicago gives notice that "all United States treasury certificates of indebtedness of series IV. D., dated Aug. 6, 1918, and maturing Dec. 5, 1918, are called for redemption on Nov. 21, 1918, at par and accrued interest, pursuant to the provisions for such redemption contained in the certificates. On Nov. 21, 1918, interest on all certificates of said series will cease to accrue."

Leighty Advanced

J. R. Leighty, whose appointment as corporate chief engineer of the Missouri Pacific, was announced in the Railway Age of Oct. 4, was born at Spencerville, Ind., on Sept. 16, 1870. He graduated from Rose Polytechnic Institute in 1891; and then entered the service of the Wisconsin Central, now a part of the Minneapolis, St. Paul & Sault Ste. Marie, as a freight bill clerk. A few months later, he went with the Chicago & Northwestern as rodman; and subsequently became instrument man and assistant engineer. As assistant engineer, Mr Leighty had charge of construction work in the Wood street (Chicago) yard and of track work in connection with track elevation on the Rockwell street branch to Forty-third street, Chicago. Later, he became roadmaster at Sparta, Wis., and at Carroll, Iowa. In 1889, he went to the Union Pacific and was assigned to duties in connection with track reconstruction and ballasting in Wyoming. The following year, he entered the service of the Baltimore & Ohio as assistant engineer in division engineer's office at Newark, Ohio. Later, he served in the same capacity at Winchester, Va., Parkersburg, W. Va., and Cumberland, Md. In 1907, he was appointed engineer maintenance of way on the western district of the Missouri Pacific, with office at Kansas City, Mo., which position he held until his appointment as chief engineer of the corporation, as mentioned above.—Railway Age.

The foregoing history of John R. Leighty's work as a railroad man is both interesting and pleasing to St. Joe and Spencerville readers; and while it shows that he changed positions a number of times, it also shows that each change was to something better, his latest promotion being to chief engineer of the Missouri Pacific, in whose employ he has been since 1907. His headquarters will be in St. Louis.

The Latest Epidemic

An epidemic of "flew" prevails in Europe. The disease is confined to crowned heads. Bill Hohenzollern has the worst case.

Want to Tell Others

Mrs. Susan Taylor, of Paulding, Ohio, says: "About two years ago, I suffered a general breakdown. I was nervous, my heart fluttered and I could scarcely drag around. I was simply miserable. I got no relief until I used Glando Tonic. The first treatment helped me. I continned the treatment until I am well. I gladly recommend Glando Tonic to others who suffer as I did.

Glando Is Her Doctor Now

Mrs. A. E. Roebuck, of Latty, Ohio, a lady 71 years old, says: "I had for several years suffered fram liver, kidney and heart trouble. I had soreness, swelling and pain in my right side. I was constipated and bothered, with short breath and a full or bloated feeling after eating. At times, my heart palpitated and, other times, it was weak and I would feel faint. I often awoke frightened or in a startled condition. Since I have used Glando Tonic, I am so well that I have decided to let Glando be my doctor in the future."

These ladies, like many others, were filled with poisonous matter caused from a sluggish condition of the liver and other glands. As soon as the poison was removed, their bodies took on new life and health was restored.

Most aged people are troubled with sluggish glandular system; and unless they use something occasionally to relieve this condition, they are miserable. These people find Glando Tonic to be just what they need. If your druggist hasn't it, insist on his getting it for you; or send directly to the Glan-Aid Co., Fort Wayne, Ind. Large $1.00 size only.

STEADIER HOG MARKETS PLA

Hog Producers and Packers Confer With sentatives of the Food Administration Agricultural Department and Adopt New Plan of Regulation.

In accordance with the policy of the Food Administration since its foundation to consult representative men in the agricultural industry on occasions of importance to special branches of the industry, on October 24 there was convened in Washington a meeting of the Live Stock Subcommittee of the Agricultural Advisory Board and the special members representing the swine industry to consider the situation in the hog market.

The conference lasted for three days, and during this time met with the executive committee of the fifty packing firms participating in foreign orders for pork products and with the members of the Food Administration directing foreign pork purchases.

The conclusions of the conference were as follows:

The entire marketing situation has so changed since the September joint conference as to necessitate an entire alteration in the plans of price stabilization. The current peace talk has alarmed the holders of corn, and there has been a price decline of from 25 cents to 40 cents per bushel. The fact that the accumulations of low priced corn in the Argentine and South Africa would, upon the advent of peace and liberated shipping, become available to the European market has created a great deal of apprehension on the part of corn holders. This decline has spread fear among swine growers that a similar reduction in the prices of hogs would naturally follow. Moreover, the lower range of corn prices would, if incorporated in a 13-to-1 ratio, obviously result in a continuously falling price for live hogs. In view of these changed conditions many swine producers anticipated lower prices and as a result rushed their hogs to market in large numbers, and this overshipment has added to and aggravated the decline.

The information of the Department of Agriculture indicates that the supply of hogs has increased about 8 per cent., while the highest unofficial estimate does not exceed 15 per cent. increased production over last year. On the other hand, the arrival of hogs during the last three weeks in the seven great markets has been 27 per cent. more than last year, during the corresponding period, demonstrating the unusually heavy marketing of the available supply. In the face of the excessive receipts some packers have not maintained the price agreed last month. On the other hand, many of the packers have paid over the price offered to them in an endeavor to maintain the agreed price. The result in any event has been a failure to maintain the October price basis determined upon at the September conference and undertaken by the packers. Another factor contributing to the break in prices during the month has been the influenza epidemic; it has sharply curtailed consumption of pork products and temporarily decreased the labor staff of the packers about 25 per cent.

The exports of 130,000,000 pounds of pork products for October compared with about 52,000,000 pounds in October a year ago, and the export orders placeable by the Food Administration for November, amount to 170,000,000 pounds as contrasted with the lesser exports of 98,000,000 for November, 1917. The increased demands of the allies are continuing, and are in themselves proof of the necessity for the large production for which the Food Administration asked. The increase in export demands appears to be amply sufficient to take up the increase in hog production, but unfavorable market conditions existing in October afford no fair index of the aggregate supply and demand.

It must be evident that the enormous shortage in fats in the Central Empires and neutral countries would immediately upon peace result in additional demands for pork products which, on top of the heavy shipments to the Allies, would tend materially to increase the American exports, inasmuch as no considerable reservoir of supplies exists outside of the United States. It seems probable that the present prospective supplies would be inadequate to meet this world demand with the return to peace. So far as it is possible to interpret this fact, it appears that there should be even a strobger demand for pork products after the war, and therefore any alarm of hog producers as to the effect of peace is unwarranted by the outlook.

In the light of these circumstances it is the conclusion of the conference that attempts to hold the price of hogs to the price of corn may work out to the disadvantage of pork producers. It is the conclusion that any interpretation of the formula should be a broad gauged policy applied over a long period. It is the opinion of the conference that in substitution of the previous plans of stabilization the Live Stock Subcommittee of the Agricultural Advisory Board, together with the specially invited swine representatives, should accept the invitation of the Food Administration to join with the Administration and the packers in determining the prices at which controlled export orders are to be placed. This will be regularly done. The influence of these orders will be directed to the maintenance of the common object—namely, the stabilization of the price of live hogs so as to secure as far as it is possible fair returns to the producer and the insurance of an adequate future supply.

These foreign orders are placed upon the basis of cost of hogs to the packers.

As the result of long negotiations between this body and the Packers' Committee, representing the 45 to 50 packers participating in foreign orders, together with the Allied buyers, all under the Chairmanship of the Food Administration, the following undertaking has been given by the packers:

In view of the undertakings on the part of the Food Administration with regard to the co-ordinated purchases of pork products, covered in the attached, it is agreed that the packers participating in these orders will undertake not to purchase hogs for less than the following agreed minimums for the month of November, that is a daily minimum of $17.50 per hundred pounds on average of packers' droves, excluding throw-outs. "Throw-outs" to be defined as pigs under 130 pounds, stags, boars, thin sows and skips. Further, that no hogs of any kind shall be bought, except throw-outs, at less than $16.50 per hundred pounds. The average of packers' droves to be construed as the average of the total sales in the market of all hogs for a given day. All the above to be based on Chicago.

We agree that a committee shall be appointed by the Food Administration to check the daily operations in the various markets with a view to supervision and demonstration of the carrying out of the above.

The ability of the packers to carry out this arrangement will depend on there being a normal marketing of hogs based upon the proportionate increase over the receipts of last year. The increase in production appears to be a maximum of about 15 per cent. and we can handle such an increase.

If the producers of hogs should, as they have in the past few weeks, prematurely market hogs in such increasing numbers over the above it is entirely beyond the ability of the packers to maintain these minimums, and therefore we must have the co-operation of the producer himself to maintain these results. It is a physical impossibility for the capacity of the packing houses to handle a similar over-flood of hogs and to find a market for the output. The packers are anxious to co-operate with the producers in maintaining a stabilization of price and to see that producers receive a fair price for their products.

(Signed) THOS. E. WILSON,
Chairman Packers' Committee.

The plan embodied above was adopted by the conference.

The Food Administrator has appointed a committee, comprising Mr. Thomas E. Wilson, chairman of the Packers' Committee; Mr. Everett Brown, president of the Chicago Livestock Exchange; Major Roy of the Food Administration, Mr. Louis D. Hall of the Bureau of Markets, to undertake the supervision of the execution of the plan in the various markets. Commission men are asked to co-operate in carrying out the plan embodied in the packers' agreement. It must be evident that offers by commission men to sell hogs below the minimum established above is not fair, either to the producer or the participating packers. Mr. Brown has undertaken on behalf of the commission men in the United States that they will loyally support the plan.

It is believed by the conference that this new plan, based as it is upon a positive minimum basis, will bring better results to the producer than average prices for the month. It does not limit top prices and should narrow the margins necessary to country buyers in more variable markets. It is believed that the plan should work out close to $18 average.

Swine producers of the country will contribute to their own interest by not flooding the market, for it must be evident that if an excessive over percentage of hogs is marketed in any one month price stabilization and control cannot succeed, and it is certain that producers themselves can contribute materially to the efforts of the conferences if they will do their marketing in as normal a way as possible.

The whole situation as existing at present demands a frank and explicit assurance from the conferees represented—namely, that every possible effort will be made to maintain a live hog price commensurate with swine production costs and reasonable selling values in execution of the declared policy of the Food Administration to use every agency in its control to secure justice to the farmer.

The stabilization methods adopted for November represent the best efforts of the conference, concurred in by the Food Administration and the Livestock Subcommittee of the Agricultural Advisory Board, together with special swine members and the representatives of the packers, to improve the present unsatisfactory situation, which has unfortunately resulted because of the injection of uncontrollable factors.

We ask the producer to co-operate with us in a most difficult task.

The members of the Conference were:

Producers—H. C. Stuart, Elk Garden, Va., Chairman Agricultural Advisory Board; W. M. McFadden, Chicago, Ill.; A. Sykes, Ida Grove, Ia.; John M. Evvard, Ames, Ia.; J. H. Prepare for Exposition

A small army of mechanics and laborers are at work preparing the mammoth structures for the 1918 International Live Stock Exposition. This essential preliminary task is being conducted on a more elaborate scale than heretofore, the management being determined to insure the comfort of visitors, exhibitors and their charges. The spacious buildings and grounds are being artistically decorated, emblems of the allied nations now battling on European soil draping both interiors and exteriors.

Since the inauguration of the exposition, it has been the policy of the management to spare no expense to insure perfection in every detail.

Owing to increased cost of material and labor, these details might have been elected this year; but the directors decided that it would be doubtful economy, and the high standard of previous years will be maintained, if not excelled.

When the gates of the exposition are opened on Nov. 30 for the great livestock roundup of the season, the public will realize that regardless of obstacles and abnormal conditions nothing essential to the success of the exposition has been overlooked.

Farewell Sermon

Rev. L. W. Spayd preached his farewell sermon at the Christian church last Sunday evening. His subject was the "Call of Abraham," and he used as his text Hebrews xi. The discourse was an able one, and in it he compared the faith of the patriarch with Christian life today; and concluded by bidding his congregation good-bye and wishing that they remain steadfast in the Christian faith.

Rev. and Mrs. Spayd came to St. Joe on Nov. 10, 1916; and Sunday evening was the second anniversary of their coming. Within that time, they have won a high place in the regard of St. Joe people; and they may be assured that they take with them the best wishes for the future. They go from here to Ulm, Ark., leaving the latter part of this week; and St. Joe joins the News in commending them to the citizens of their new home.

Xmas Parcels For Soldiers.

The period for mailing Christmas parcels to soldiers overseas has been extended to include November 30, says a statement issued Tuesday by lake division Red Cross headquarters.

The Red Cross issues this statement inasmuch as Red Cross chapters throughout the country have been assisting the war and postoffice departments in their plan to get one Christmas parcel to each soldier overseas. This Red Cross assistance has consisted of providing the cartons for the Christmas parcels and inspecting and wrapping the parcels for shipment.

November 20 was to have been the final date upon which the Red Cross and the postoffice department would accept these Christmas packages for shipment overseas. The period was extended to include November 30 when reports from all over the country indicated that but a small per cent. of the Christmas parcels labels, given to soldiers overseas for mailing home to their nearest relative, have reached this country. Without one of these labels the Red Cross and the postoffice department cannot accept Christmas parcels for soldiers abroad.

If by November 21 the nearest relative of a soldier has not received from that soldier a Christmas parcel label Red Cross chapters will supply one label only for each soldier, taking an affidavit from the recipient of the emergency label worded as follows:

The undersigned hereby makes application to forward to ....(organisation)............expeditionary forces, a Christmas package.

The undersigned hereby declares that he or she is the nearest living relative in the United States of the proposed recipient; that he or she has not received a label from abroad, and that should said label be received, it would not be used, and that to the best of his or her knowledge and belief only one Christmas parcel will be sent to the proposed recipient.

Signed................

Those desiring labels and parcels may obtain same by calling at the home of Mrs. F B. Leighty after the 21, and on next Monday afternoon you are requested to bring your parcel and label to the postoffice and have it inspected and packed by the committee in charge. Please do not put this off.

Obituary

CORDELIA J. YARNELL (nee Woodcox), daughter of Cornelius and Mary Woodcox, was born near Newville, DeKalb county, Ind., Nov. 22, 1839; and departed this life at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Beeks Erick, of Ft. Wayne, Nov. 15, 1918, aged 78 years, 11 months and 24 days.

On Oct. 6, 1861, deceased was united in married to Jacob Yarnell. To this union were born two daughters—Mrs. Viola Erick, who survives; and Mrs Mabel Leighty, who passed away several years ago. One brother, G. W. Woodcox, lives in St. Joe.

Mrs. Yarnell had been a member of the United Brethren church for sixty-five years immediately preceding her death. She was a highly respected lady: as a neighbor, she was among the best; as a Christian, she was always faithful. Thus a life that was one of the best has gone from among us

In addition to her daughter and her brother, she is survived by four grandchildren—Ted and Marjorie Erick, of Fort Wayne; Mrs. William Cheek and Miss Margaret Leighty, of Fort Collins, Col.—five great grandchildren and many other relatives and friends.

Funeral services were held on Monday at the home in St. Joe, conducted by Rev. J. W. Lilly, of Hicksville; interment, at Riverside cemetery.

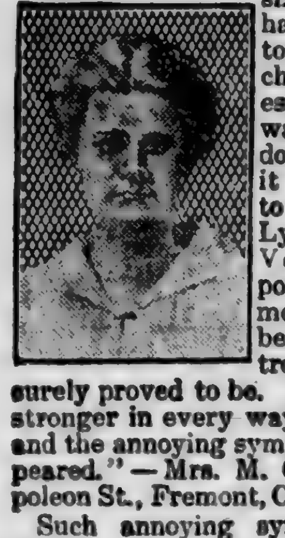
THAT CHANGE IN WOMAN'S LIFE

Mrs. Godden Tells How It May be Passed in Safety and Comfort.



Fremont, O.—"I was passing through the critical period of life, being forty-six years of age and had all the symptoms incident to that change—heat flashes, nervousness, and was in a general run down condition, so it was hard for me to do my work. Old Codger Explains Why Politician Does Not Seem as Useless as Once Appeared to Be.

"For a long time my pet detestation was the Hon. Bascom Bogger," confessed the Old Codger. "He is a born honorable, who was twice elected to trifling offices, which encouraged him so that he never ceased being a candidate. To the casual observer about all he ever does is to strut and utter ponderous piffle. Wherever you go you are fairly certain to encounter him braying his bombastic bunkum. As a matter of fact, he is a horse doctor on the side, and as horses are easily fooled he enjoys a tolerably fair practice.

"But the other day I discovered him in a new role. Death visited a rickety shack down by the brickyard, and because the poor family had no friends the Hon. Bascom Bogger butted in and bossed the obsequies. He rustled up pallbearers, bullied several people into putting their vehicles in the procession, started the hymns and sang them through in his burly voice, and managed the affair so successfully that the miserable family felt quite proud of themselves and the function. I found out that he made a practice of attending the funerals of poor people and infusing as much life and pep into them as is possible to get into such events. So, somehow, since I made the discovery the Hon. Bascom Bogger hasn't seemed quite so tiresome to me as formerly."—Kansas City Star.

FOOD STORES LAX IN CLEANLINESS.

Federal Food Inspector at Work in a Clean Store.

PREVENT WASTE BY CLEANLINESS

Necessity of Maintaining Pre-War Standards of Sanitation Are Pointed Out.

SCARCITY OF HELP BLAMED

Most Essential Factor in Health of Nation Need Not Be Neglected Under War Conditions—Country Store Bothersome.

Many grocery stores have fallen away from pre-war standards of cleanliness, say officials of the bureau of chemistry, United States department of agriculture, in charge of the enforcement of the Federal Food and Drugs Act. State and city inspectors attribute this partly to scarcity of help and to less efficient help.

Cleanliness in handling food is even more important in times of war than in times of peace, say the specialists, in order that the maximum efficiency of our army of fighters abroad and our army of workers at home may be maintained. Clean stores not only promote health, but prevent waste of food. That they can be kept clean under prevailing conditions is shown by the fact that some of the best stores are maintained in standards of cleanliness which insure that the food they handle will not be contaminated. This is evidence that this most essential factor in the health of the nation need not be neglected under war conditions.

The small country grocery is one of the most difficult problems of the food inspector. The country store is both a collecting and distributing agency of foods. It buys from the farmer such products as eggs, poultry, nuts, fruits, grains and vegetables and sells to him everything in the food line not produced in the community. It handles food both coming and going. If the store is dirty, with dust on the shelves and cobwebs in the corners, with insects and vermin under the counters and in the bins, and with flies everywhere, the food both for the country and for the city is sure to become contaminated. When the country as a whole is considered, the loss of food through spoilage from contamination in unclean stores is enormous. The most important consideration, however, in the opinion of federal, state and city food officials, is the danger to the health of the people who consume the food. A dirty, insanitary store or food shop is a most potent factor in the spread of disease.

Competition in Cleanliness.

Where there is keen competition, cleanliness is more likely to prevail. A clean, well-lighted store attracts customers. The cost of scrupulous cleanliness is more than overbalanced by the gain in the prevention of spoilage, and by its custom-drawing value.

Novel methods have been adopted by state and city officials to bring about competition in cleanliness. One state has reported excellent results from authorizing the food inspectors to issue colored placards to the stores at the time of inspection indicating the degree of cleanliness found. A store which is found to be in excellent condition in cleanliness and sanitation is given a white card; one in good condition is given a blue card, and one that is satisfactory is given a red card. A store that falls below a satisfactory rating is not given a card. This system resulted in much competition among the merchants to get the highest possible rating in sanitation. The housewives soon learned what the placards signified, and did their buying accordingly.

One of the most effective methods adopted by food officials has been the enlistment of women's clubs and other civic organizations to aid in cleaning campaigns. It is possible under the best conditions for food inspectors to visit any one store but a few times each year. The members of local organizations and the housewives who visit the stores daily can exert an effective influence for cleanliness once their interest is aroused and the importance of the work pointed out to them. As soon as the proprietor of a food shop realizes that his customers will leave him unless he complies with reasonable sanitary requirements he at once falls in line.

Federal, State and City Co-operation.

Federal, state and city food officials co-operate in enforcing laws applicable to foods and drugs, and in conducting educational campaigns for cleanliness. At a recent meeting of the Association of American Dairy, Food and Drug Officials plans for closer co-operation were worked out. City food officials were admitted to membership in the association and arrangements were made for the organization of state associations of food control officials and for associations of sectional groups of federal, state and city food officials who have common conditions and common problems.

The Federal Food and Drugs Act does not confer authority to regulate directly the sanitary conditions of stores and shops where food is put up or sold. However, if food becomes contaminated in an insanitary store, or in any other manner, and is afterward shipped into interstate commerce, the party responsible for the shipment may be prosecuted under the federal law, and the contaminated food may be seized.

HELP CLEAN UP STORES

Women's clubs and others can help in campaigns to clean up food stores by:

Patronizing only stores that maintain high standards of cleanliness.

Reporting insanitary conditions in stores to proper authorities.

Discussing the subject at their meetings.

Appointing committees to report on condition of local stores.

Suggesting, through their organization, how storekeepers can improve their standards of sanitation.

Leaves Make Good Bedding.

The importance of securing the greatest possible return from the manure supply of the country can hardly be overestimated at any time. It is infinitely greater when the production of food is so vital to the nation as during the present crisis.

In localities where leaves are obtainable at small cost as compared to the cost of straw, a condition which exists in some sections, it would seem advisable to make use of this material for bedding instead of straw. It is a well-known practice in the wooded sections of the South to use leaves for bedding. Frequently land has been built up into a high state of fertility when this was practically the only means of supplying humus to the soil.

Winter Exercise.

Considering winter egg production only, exercise is not absolutely essential. Much good winter laying has been done by flocks with very little exercise, but such flocks do not usually lay as well the rest of the year, and if management is wrong at some other point they are very apt to have more than their due proportion of deaths toward the end of the winter.

The late fall garden cleaning kills many insect pests. Burn the trash.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

THE PATRIOTIC TURKEY.

"I have had various experiences and adventures," said Mr. Turkey, "quite unlike other turkeys."

"What adventures have you had?" asked Grandfather Turkey.

Both these turkeys were quite old and they were enjoying a good talk about "old times" when they were young turkeys.

"Well, of course, my colors are interesting," said Mr. Turkey.

"They are, indeed," agreed Grandfather Turkey. "In fact I have never seen a turkey just like you. You are very different from us. Tell me your history. Let me hear about your experiences and adventures."

"I will tell you, gobble, gobble, gobble, I will tell you," said Mr. Turkey.

"You see," he commenced, "I have very wonderful plumage or feathers. I have three splendid colors among my feathers as you have doubtless noticed."

Grandfather Turkey nodded his head and Mr. Turkey went on talking.

"There are three colors which every one loves among my feathers," he continued, "and they are the colors, red, white and blue."

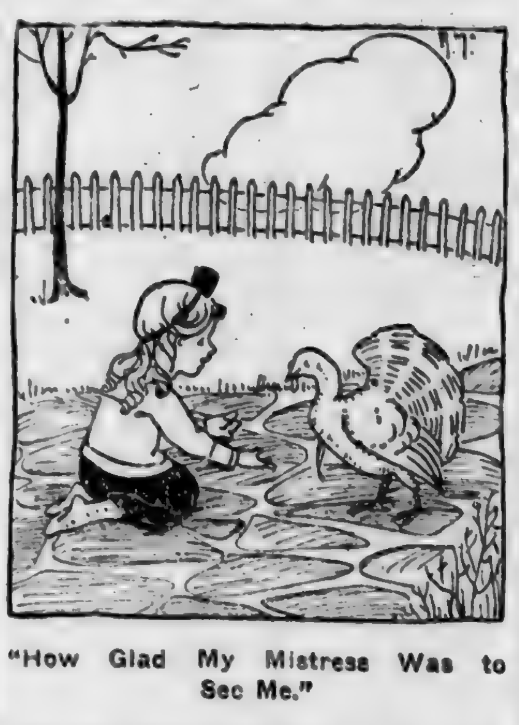
"Last year you came here for a little while and then you went away again," said Grandfather Turkey.

"Yes, I was here for part of a day," said Mr. Turkey. "It is good of you to have remembered me, having only seen me such a short time, and we had no chance then to become friends.

"Well, I came from a farm near by with my little mistress. Her daddy owns the farm but she loves all the animals so we all think of her as our mistress.

"She came to visit her cousins who live on this farm and she brought me over to show me to them. She was extremely proud of me because I was the only turkey with these three colors in my feathers.

"She said I was a fine and patriotic turkey and she loved me, but she thought perhaps it would be nice to send me to some very fine man—I don't know his name—but he was a very fine man at the head of the country in some way or other."



"How Glad My Mistress Was to See Me."

"Don't bother thinking of the man's name," said Grandfather Turkey. "It is enough that you were sent to a very fine man. That is, you were sent, weren't you?"

"Yes," said Mr. Turkey. "I was. The little girl cried many tears on my red, white and blue feathers but she said such a patriotic turkey should go to a patriotic man who helped his country and worked for it all the time.

"Although she was sorry to see me go she was proud she had such a fine turkey to send. And she put in a card with her name on it and said that Mr. Turkey was arriving with his best suit on and would be quite willing to serve as a Thanksgiving or Christmas treat.

"She didn't put her address in with me, but I was put in a crate and sent off.

"Well, I arrived. It was at a railway station. From there I was taken in my crate in a wagon to a very large, white house—oh, it was a large house. And there I was shown to the fine man and he read what was written on the card which was inside the crate.

"'Well,' said the fine man, 'you are a wonderful turkey. You have red, white and blue in your feathers. Good for you, young turkey, good for you.'

"But I was not taken for Thanksgiving dinner nor for Christmas dinner, for the fine man said he could see I was some little girl's pet, so after a good while he found my mistress' address and back I went on the railway train once more. How glad my mistress was to see me and she read what the fine man had written on the other side of her card.

"He had said how glad he had been to see me and that I was a nice caller, but that I should go back home to the nice little girl who had done such an unselfish, thoughtful thing."

"So you have had adventures!" said Grandfather Turkey admiringly.

"Yes," said Mr. Turkey, "and my mistress came over on a visit here today and brought me along with her. I feel like a very lucky turkey, I can tell you."

Repairing His Trees.

Little Harry one day asked his mother who made the trees, and was told that God made them. A few days later an old colored man came to trim the trees, and the little fellow, seeing him at work, ran to his mother and exclaimed: "Oh, mamma, God's in the yard repairing his trees!"

LESSON FOR NOVEMBER 24

JACOB AND ESAU RECONCILED.

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 33:1-11.
GOLDEN TEXT—A soft answer turneth away wrath.—Proverbs 15:1.
DEVOTIONAL READING—Psalms 46.
ADDITIONAL MATERIAL—Genesis 32:3-33:28.

From Bethel, Jacob went to Padan-aram to his mother's people. Here he served Laban for twenty years—fourteen years for his wives and six years for certain wages. In his dealings with Laban he finds his match—two schemers get together—"diamond cuts diamond."

I. Jacob Departs for Canaan (31:11-21).

The time had come for Jacob to go back to his kindred in the land of Canaan. The Lord instructed him so to do (v. 13). Though going forward under the direction of God, his Jacob-nature caused him to take clandestine leave of Laban. When Laban realized the situation he went in hot pursuit, but God appeared unto him in a dream and warned him against any act of violence toward Jacob. They formed a compact and Laban returned home.

II. Jacob on the Way (chapter 32.)

Laban's return freed Jacob from the enemy who was pursuing him from behind, but he faced a more formidable one in the person of Esau.

1. Jacob meeting the angels (v. 1). Two camps of angels met him to give him the assurance that God would be with him according to his promise. Notwithstanding this, he continued to scheme. He sent a deputation with a message of good cheer to Esau.

2. Jacob praying (vv. 9-12).

Esau made no reply to Jacob's message, but went forward with an army of men, four hundred strong, to meet Jacob. Jacob is in great distress, therefore he casts himself upon God in prayer. This is a fine specimen of effectual prayer. It is short, direct, and earnest. (1) He reminds God of his command issued for his return, and also of the covenant promise (31:3). Surely God would not issue a command and then leave him in such a strait. (2) Pleads God's promise as to his personal safety (v. 9, cf. Genesis 28:13-15, 31-33). In our praying we should definitely plead God's promises in his word, on the ground of covenant relationship in Christ. (3) Confesses unworthiness (v. 10). In this he shows the proper spirit of humility. (4) Presents definite petitions (v. 11). He lays before the Lord the definite request to be delivered from the wrath of Esau.

3. The angel of Jehovah wrestling with Jacob (32:24-32).

In God's school of discipline, Jacob is making some improvement, but still he is under the sway of self-will and self-trust. Though he had laid the matter definitely before the Lord, he thought that his scheming would render God some assistance. Accordingly, he sent presents ahead to appease the anger of Esau. While journeying along, a man met him and wrestled with him, but Jacob knew not who he was. Perhaps he thought that Esau had pounced upon him in the dark. He exerted every ounce of strength in what he thought was the struggle for his very life. The morning was approaching, and still the wrestlers continued, Jacob not knowing it was Jehovah manifest in human form. This is the second crisis in Jacob's life. He did not dare to enter the promised land under the control of his self-sufficiency; his selfish will must be broken; his Jacob-nature must be changed. God humbled him by dislocating his thigh. When thus humbled, he quit wrestling and clung to God. He got the blessing when he, conscious of his weakness, laid hold of God.

4. Jacob gets a new name (v. 28).

He was no longer Jacob, the supplanter; but Israel, a prince of God. His new name was given him after he had a new nature. He came face to face with God, and face to face with himself, and fought the battle to a finish. We must have the new nature before we can enter the place of blessing. Jacob came to realize that he had been struggling with God, for he called the place "Peniel," which means "face to face with God."

III. Jacob Meets Esau (33:1-11).

God had evidently wrought with Esau, for when Jacob approached him the sting of bitterness was gone. It was not Jacob's scheming that removed Esau's anger, but the action of the Supernatural upon his heart. At Jabbok Jacob got right with God, so when he met Esau it was an easy matter to get right with him. When we are right with God it is an easy matter to get right with our brother.

In This Life.

We hear much of love to God. Christ spoke much of love to man. We make a great deal of peace with heaven. Christ made much of peace on earth. Religion is not a strange or added thing, but the inspiration of the secular life, the breathing of an eternal spirit through this temporal world.

Man and His Faith.

Faith is the substratum of life; so that a man will be as he believes, and will believe as he lives.—Wm. M. Taylor.

HOW TO FIGHT

SPANISH INFLUENZA

By DR. L. W. BOWERS.

Avoid crowds, coughs and cowards, but fear neither germs nor Germans! Keep the system in good order, take plenty of exercise in the fresh air and practice cleanliness. Remember a clean mouth, a clean skin, and clean bowels are a protecting armour against disease. To keep the liver and bowels regular and to carry away the poisons within, it is best to take a vegetable pill every other day, made up of May-apple, aloes, jalap, and sugar-coated, to be had at most drug stores, known as Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. If there is a sudden onset of what appears like a hard cold, one should go to bed, wrap warm, take a hot mustard foot-bath and drink copiously of hot lemonade. If pain develops in head or back, ask the druggist for Anuric (anti-uric) tablets. These will flush the bladder and kidneys and carry off poisonous germs. To control the pains and aches take one Anuric tablet every two hours, with frequent drinks of lemonade. The pneumonia appears in a most treacherous way, when the influenza victim is apparently recovering and anxious to leave his bed. In recovering from a bad attack of influenza or pneumonia the system should be built up with a good herbal tonic, such as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, made without alcohol from the roots and barks of American forest trees, or his Irontic (iron tonic) tablets, which can be obtained at most drug stores, or send 10c. to Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., for trial package.

Relieved the Tension.

A little boy at school saw his teacher faint and fall. In the confusion it was impossible to keep so many heads cool, and the little ones flocked 'round the prostrate lady and her sympathetic colleagues. But this small boy kept both his color and his coolness.

Standing on a bench and raising his hand, he exclaimed: "Please, teacher, can I run and fetch father? He makes coffins." The peal of laughter which greeted this unconscious humor roused the teacher from her short trance, and nobody enjoyed the youngster's saying more than she did when the circumstances were explained to her afterward.

The Healthiest Way.

A company commander received an order from battalion headquarters to send in a return giving the number of dead Huns in front of his sector of the trench. He sent in the number as 2,001. H. Q. rang up and asked how he arrived at this unusual figure.

"Well," he replied, "I'm certain about the one, because I counted him myself. He's hanging on the wire just in front of me. I estimated the 2,000. I worked it out all by myself in my own head that it was healthier to estimate 'em than to walk about in No Man's Land and count 'em."

1 Ton of Beef Value $400.00 Profit $5.00 or 1¼%
1 Ton of Coal Value $7.00 Profit $.25 or 3½%

Why Compare Beef and Coal Profits?

Swift & Company has frequently stated that its profit on beef averages only one-fourth of a cent a pound, and hence has practically no effect on the price.

Comparison has been made by the Federal Trade Commission of this profit with the profit on coal, and it has pointed out that anthracite coal operators are content with a profit of 25 cents a ton, whereas the beef profit of one-fourth of a cent a pound means a profit of $5.00 a ton.

The comparison does not point out that anthracite coal at the seaboard is worth at wholesale about $7.00 a ton, whereas a ton of beef of fair quality is worth about $400.00 wholesale.

To carry the comparison further, the 25 cent profit on coal is 3½ per cent of the $7.00 value.

The $5.00 profit on beef is only 1¼ per cent of the $400.00 value.

The profit has little effect on price in either case, but has less effect on the price of beef than on the price of coal.

Coal may be stored in the open air indefinitely; beef must be kept in expensive coolers because it is highly perishable and must be refrigerated.

Coal is handled by the carload or ton; beef is delivered to retailers by the pound or hundred weight.

Methods of handling are vastly different. Coal is handled in open cars; beef must be shipped in refrigerator cars at an even temperature.

Fairness to the public, fairness to Swift & Company, fairness to the packing industry, demands that these indisputable facts be considered. It is impossible to disprove Swift & Company's statement, that its profits on beef are so small as to have practically no effect on prices.

STATE NEWS

Indianapolis.—Dr. Herman G. Morgan, secretary of the city board of health, said that the influenza-pneumonia situation in Indianapolis is not encouraging, from forty to fifty new cases are developing daily and between five and ten deaths from pneumonia are being reported each day. "Unless the public takes special care we may expect to have influenza and pneumonia with us all through the winter," said Doctor Morgan. "The careless spitter, cougher and sneezer should be ostracized. Every precaution should be taken against the spread of nose and throat infections." Twenty-five counties reported 479 new cases of influenza to the state board of health in the reports to the state board. Conditions have become serious at Frankfort and Vincennes, where emergency hospitals were again established. The epidemic still rages in the coal mining district about Linton.

Indianapolis.—W. W. Winslow, secretary of the state council of defense committee on building and new construction, is notifying former unsuccessful applicants for building and construction permits of the ruling announced by the war industries board, removing in a great degree restrictions on construction projects. Mr. Winslow estimates that millions of dollars of new construction and building contemplated by private and public interests may now proceed in Indiana through the release granted by the war board. Governor Goodrich, especially, was pleased over the fact that building may proceed again in a nearly normal manner, for he believes that the new work will be of the greatest use in supplying employment to returning soldiers and to the thousands of workers soon to leave munitions industries.

Indianapolis.—Federal food administrators in Indiana counties will meet in Indianapolis for a conference with H. E. Barnard, state administrator, who has returned from Washington, D. C., with information as to the program of the food administration. Mr. Barnard conferred with Herbert Hoover, national administrator, and administrators of other states while at the national capital. Information reaching the Indiana state council of defense from Washington is that the United States department of agriculture will not take over food administration, as has been rumored. It is pointed out that the food administration will continue by law until "legal peace is declared." Meanwhile the administration is not to relax its efforts to conserve food, it is asserted.

Indianapolis.—Coal dealers in Indianapolis will not be restricted to a fixed gross margin in selling coal to consumers here. The margin limit of $2 a ton which has been in effect since March 18 was removed by Evans Woollen, state fuel administrator, following a conference in which a committee representing the Retail Coal Dealers' association presented the claim that its members have not been making money while restricted to the gross profit of $2 a ton. Domestic consumers probably will be asked to pay 50 cents a ton more for coal. This will change the price to householders from $5.50 and $5.65 a ton to $6 and $6.15 a ton.

Hammond.—Now that the world war is over business and financial men of the Calumet region, which includes the steel cities of Hammond, Gary, East Chicago, Indiana Harbor and Whiting, in Indiana, have begun to turn their attention to problems of readjustment. These will arise as industries, on which the greater part of a combined 200,000 population is largely dependent, settle down to a peace-time basis. The principal industrial activities of the region include production of steel, building of railway equipment, refining of oil and manufacture of chemicals. In addition the operation of railway terminals results in the employment of large numbers of men.

Indianapolis. — Governor Goodrich will confer with Washington (D. C.) authorities to learn what is to be done about continuing the war agencies in Indiana, such as the state, county and township councils of defense, fuel and food administrations and the like. There must be no letup in the steps being taken for the conservation of coal, the officials of the state fuel administration were warned in a message from H. A. Garfield, federal fuel administrator. The message pointed out that it is just as essential that the fuel supply be conserved now as it has been at any time since the beginning of the war.

Terre Haute.—The oldest medical society west of the Allegheny mountains, the Aesculapian society of the Wabash Valley, recently held its seventy-second annual meeting, at which Dr. Joseph Hall of Westfield was elected president. The society was formed when doctors rode horseback, with saddlebags filled with medicine and surgical instruments in Indiana and Illinois, and was the first to foster Rush Medical college of Chicago.

Anderson.—For the first time in 30 years the Madison county jail is without a prisoner awaiting trial in the circuit court. The only persons in jail are being detained while awaiting admittance to a hospital for the insane.

Evansville.—Sale of the real and personal property belonging to Charles Kahn has brought the total of his gift to the American Red Cross society up to $110,000, according to Phelps F. Darby, administrator of his estate. Mr. Kahn died several months ago in a sanitarium at Battle Creek, Mich., and he left all his property to the Red Cross. He was a bachelor.

Indianapolis.—William Howard Taft, former president of the United States, will be one of the speakers of the sixty-fifth annual meeting of the Indiana State Teachers' association, which will meet in Indianapolis November 28, 29 and 30. He will deliver an address at Tomlinson hall the morning of November 30. The date of the annual meeting as originally announced has been changed to the last three days of this month. In addition to the general meetings at 2 p. m., November 28 and 29, and at 9 a. m., November 30, there will be numerous sectional meetings in the morning and afternoon of November 29 and 30. There will also be various luncheons and breakfasts. It promises to be one of the most notable of the many educational symposiums conducted by the Indiana State Teachers' association. Noted educators and public men of other states, as well as of Indiana, are on the program. At the first general association session, the evening of November 28, at Tomlinson hall, Frank O. Lowden, governor of Illinois, will make an address, and the inaugural address will be made by Horace Ellis, president of the general association.

Indianapolis. — The public service commission authorized the Wabash Water and Light company, Wabash, to add a 15 per cent surcharge to all bills for electric light for commercial and municipal purposes in the city of Wabash and a surcharge of 30 per cent to all bills for power and light for the town of Roann. It authorized the company also to increase its water hydrant charge to the city of Wabash from $25 to $50 and its water charge to the C., C. C. & St. L. railroad from the primary rate of 4 cents to the primary rate of 6 cents a 1,000 gallons. The commission authorized the Washington Water, Light and Power company, Washington, to increase its gas rate to the primary charge of $1.40 and to collect 10 cents a 1,000 cubic feet on delinquent bills. It increased the city's fire hydrant bill from $25 to $55 a hydrant.

Indianapolis.—Praise for the way in which the Indiana state penal farm is conducted and suggestions to the Hoosier authorities relative to the possible construction of a new reformatory for men are contained in a letter received by the board of state charities from John L. Whitman, superintendent of prisons in Illinois. Mr. Whitman, who has had 20 years' experience in prison work in Illinois, visited the state farm and the woman's prison several weeks ago. In the letter he refers to the Indiana state reformatory at Jeffersonville and the plans now being considered for the enlargement or removal of the institution to a more central location in the state. Mr. Whitman suggests that the labor of constructing the new buildings be done by the inmates.

Indianapolis.—The Central States Broom Manufacturers' association, of which Grant Shearer of New Bremen, O., has been president, held a special meeting here recently. Indiana, Ohio, Michigan, Illinois and Iowa were represented. The meeting was called to elect a president, as Mr. Shearer has transferred his business to Oklahoma and is no longer a member of the organization. J. D. Valentine, Urbana, O., was elected president and John G. Reinert of Indianapolis vice president. Harry Jennine of Greenup, Ill., is secretary. Manufacturers say that although they are unable to make enough brooms to supply the trade there will be no increase in prices.

Valparaiso.—Circuit Judge Loring handed down a decision in which he held that a person divorced in Illinois and ordered by a court not to remarry within a year cannot be married legally in Indiana before the year is up. This decision holds hundreds of marriages wherein couples have crossed from Illinois and have been married here to evade the Illinois law to be illegal. Judge Loring held that the marriage would be illegal even though the couple did not return to Illinois.

Indianapolis.—The Indiana reformatory commission appointed by Governor Goodrich met at the statehouse and selected Winfield Miller to be chairman; Robert Bracken, vice chairman, and Amos W. Butler, secretary. Other members of the commission are G. A. H. Shideler, superintendent of the institution, and Dr. S. E. Smith, superintendent of the Eastern Hospital for the Insane. The commission will visit the reformatory and determine a basis on which to begin its investigations.

Petersburg. — Home-grown potatoes sold here at $2 a bushel until several cars of imported potatoes arrived. These sold at $1.35. Home growers then cut the price to $1.50 a bushel. A good crop of turnips is being harvested. Turnips are selling at $1 a bushel.

Kokomo.—Howard county voted by a majority of 2,732 to establish a tuberculosis hospital. The project was pushed by the chamber of commerce, which was actuated by a desire to care for returned soldiers sick with the disease as well as community cases.

Greenfield.—During the last few months T. H. New & Son of this city have bought and sold 166,000 bushels of inferior corn, all of which has been converted into food by a process of hulling and drying. Much of it was made into glucose.

Indianapolis.—Further selective service work having to do with draft registrants thirty-seven years old and over is called off in directions which Maj. Robert C. Baltzell, state draft executive, has sent to local draft boards in Indiana. Major Baltzell says that registrants within the ages specified and having questionnaires to be returned to the boards should fill them out and return them. He is acting on instructions from the secretary of war in the matter. He instructed also that local boards complete the classification of registrants eighteen to thirty-seven years old.

WEAK KIDNEYS MEAN A WEAK BODY

When you're fifty, your body begins to creak a little at the hinges. Motion is more slow and deliberate. "Not so young as I used to be" is a frequent and unwelcome thought. Certain bodily functions upon which good health and good spirits so much depend, are impaired. The weak spot is generally the bladder. Unpleasant symptoms show themselves. Painful and annoying complications in other organs arise. This is particularly true with elderly people. If you only know how, this trouble can be obviated.

For over 200 years GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil has been relieving the inconvenience and pain due to advancing years. It is a standard, old-time home remedy, and needs no introduction. It is now put up in odorless, tasteless capsules. These are easier and more pleasant to take than the oil in bottles.

Each capsule contains about one dose of five drops. Take them just like you would any pill, with a small swallow of water. They soak into the system and throw off the poisons which are making you old before your time. They will quickly relieve those stiffened joints, that backache, rheumatism, lumbago, sciatica, gall stones, gravel, "brick dust," etc. They are an effective remedy for all diseases of the bladder, kidney, liver, stomach and allied organs.

GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules cleanse the kidneys and purify the blood. They frequently ward off attacks of the dangerous and fatal diseases of the kidneys. They have a beneficial effect, and often completely cure the diseases of the bodily organs, allied with the bladder and kidneys.

If you are troubled with soreness across the loins or with "simple" aches and pains in the back take warning, it may be the preliminary indications of some dreadful malady which can be warded off or cured if taken in time.

Acid-Stomach Victims Sickly, Weak, Unfit, Depressed

Maybe you have an acid-stomach—and don't know it! There are millions of such people—weak, ailing, tired, worn out and "all in" before the day is half gone—listless and indifferent to their surroundings—often with aches and pains all over the body—woefully lacking in physical power and mental vigor—pale, emaciated—just dragging out a weary existence. Nine out of every ten of these people are unconscious victims of acid-stomach.

Thousands upon thousands of people who are subject to attacks of indigestion and biliousness; who are nervous, melancholy, mentally depressed; who suffer from rheumatism, lumbago or sciatica—yes, even many of those who have catarrh, ulcer or cancer of the stomach—if the trouble is traced to its source, it will often be found to be just acid-stomach. For these are only some of the ailments that are caused by what the doctors call superacidity, which is another name for sour or acid-stomach.

What you want to know above all else is how to quickly rid yourself of excess acid. A wonderful modern remedy called EATONIC literally wipes it out. It does the work easily, speedily and naturally. It makes the stomach pure, sweet, cool and comfortable. It helps you get full strength out of every mouthful of good you eat; and unless you DO get full strength from your food you cannot enjoy robust, vigorous health. You eat to LIVE. Your life depends on the strength you get from your food. There is no other way.

EATONIC is in pleasant-tasting tablet form—just like a bit of candy. We urge you—no matter what you have tried—take Eatonic just one week and find out for yourself how wonderfully improved you will feel. See how quickly EATONIC banishes the immediate effects of acid-stomach — bloat, heartburn, belching, food-repeating, sour, gassy stomach, indigestion, etc. See too, how quickly your general health improves—how much more you relish your food—how much more easily it is digested—how soundly you sleep—how nervousness and irritability disappear. And all simply because by taking EATONIC you have rid your stomach of a lot of excess acid that has been holding you back and making your life miserable.

EATONIC is absolutely harmless. It can be taken by the most delicate. Tens of thousands of people who have used it are enthusiastic in its praise.

EATONIC is absolutely guaranteed, so get a big 50c box from your druggist. If it does not help you your money will be refunded. If your druggist does not keep EATONIC, send your name and address to the Eatonic Remedy Company, 1018 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill., and they will at once mail you a 50c box and you can send them the money for it after you receive it.

Excellent Home-Made Cough Medicine

You Don't Find Glando Pine the Best Cough Medicine You Ever Had in the Home, Money Cheerfully Refunded.

If you could buy four sacks of good flour for the price of one, would you hesitate? We are making you the same offer on our cough remedy: four times as much for 50c as if you bought the ready made kind, and guaranteed to give satisfaction. Could you ask more?

You might combine all the other pines that are used for coughs and colds, then you could not hope to have a cough remedy equal to our Glando Pine. Glando Pine is recommended for coughs, colds, hoarseness, bronchial affections, croup, throat irritations or any condition where a good cough remedy is needed. It relieves the spasmodic cough in whooping cough. The first dose of Glando Pine relieves. It opens up the air cells and makes you breathe deep and easy. Children like to take it.

Mr. Shearer, owner of the machine shop of Haveland, Ohio, gives the following testimony: "My son had a cough for several years. We began to think his case was hopeless. He got no relief until he got Glando Pine. Three bottles cured him. I believe Glando Pine saved his life."

Ask your druggist for a bottle of Glando Pine (50c worth). This will make one pint of excellent cough medicine Directions with each bottle. Manufactured by the Glando-Aid Co., Fort Wayne, Ind.

THANKSGIVING PROCLAMASION—By the President of the United States of America—A Proclamation.

It has long been our custom to turn in the autumn of the year in praise and thanksgiving to Almighty God for His many blessings and mercies to us as a nation. This year, we have a special and moving cause to be grateful and to rejoice. God has in His good pleasure given us peace. It has not come as a mere cessation of arms, a mere relief from the strain and tragedy of war It has come as a great triumph of right. Complete victory has brought to us, not peace alone, but the confident promise of a new day as well, in which justice shall replace force and jealous intrigue among the nations. Our gallant armies have participated in a triumph which is not marred nor stained by another purpose of selfish aggression. In a righteous cause, they have won immortal glory and have nobly served their nation in serving mankind. God has indeed been gracious. We have cause for such rejoicing as revives and strengthens in us all the best traditions of our national history. A new day shines about us, in which our hearts take new courage and look forward with new hope to new and greater duties. While we render thanks for these things, let us not forget to seek the Divine guidance in the performance of those duties and Divine mercy and forgiveness for all errors of act or purpose, and pray that in all that we do we shall strengthen the ties of friendship and mutual respect upon which we shall assist to build the new structure of peace and good will among the nations.

Wherefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, president of the United States of America, do hereby designate Thursday, the 28th day of November, next, as a day of thanksgiving and prayer; and invite the people throughout the land to cease upon that day from their ordinary occupations and in their several homes and places of worship to render thanks to God.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done in the District of Columbia, this sixteenth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand, nine hhundred and eighteen, [L. S.] and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundred and forty-third.

WOODROW WILSON.

By the President:
ROBERT LANSING, Secretary of State.

The local Odd Fellows are now at home in their new hall over the postoffice.

Had a Fire on Friday Eve.

Fire broke out at 9:30 p. m. Friday in the house on the Jack Beams farm, occupied by Clint. Webb, south of town. When discovered by Mrs. Webb, the entire roof was ablaze. An alarm was turned in and a call sent to St. Joe for help. The "bucket brigade" had had the fire on the outside under control when the St. Joe firemen arrived, but had been unable to reach the interior for lack of hose. The St. Joe boys quickly finished the work. The fire started from an outside chimney. The house will have to reroofed, replastered and repapered. Mr. Beams carried a light insurance only, but Mr. Webb had the contents insured.

CHRISTMAS THEN AND NOW

In the Old Days Gifts Were Tokens of Love, in Keeping With the Day Celebrated.

What a vast difference there is in the Christmas of today, from the Christmas of our forefathers. In those days there was not the hurry scurry shopping, and costly, somewhat useless gifts given with the thought that the receiver might give a finer one in return. The gifts given in those days were gifts of love, wholly in keeping with the day celebrated, says a correspondent in an exchange.

For many weeks and months did mother spin, color and wind the yarn, and knit on wooden needles or a bone hook the warm neck scarf or mittens for her loved one, every stitch bearing a message of love. And then as the time drew near how savory the kitchen smelled every time one entered, but, of course, nothing was visible for mother or aunty or grandmother had safely hidden away the tender gingerbread and spice cakes, and the brittle molasses taffy, plates of butterscotch and other candy rich in nut meats.

What happy times when the stockings of all sizes, and almost all colors, were hung on the mantel shelf above the wide fireplace, where old Santa had no trouble at all to come down and deposit the numerous things from his pack in the dangling stockings.

Everyone was remembered with some sort of a gift, none were forgotten, and I feel sure the home-made goodies were devoured with as much relish and with less after effects, as the store goodies of today. There were no coal tar dyes in the Christmas candy grandmother made.

Then when the team was hooked to the farm sled, with the farm wagon bed on it partly filled with straw and bed covers, what a fine ride to church over the shining snow, to hear a real Scripture sermon about the birth of our Savior, on earth peace, good will to men.

The night that erst no name had worn,
To it a happy name is given,
For in that stable lay, newborn,
The peaceful prince of earth and heaven.
—Alfred Dommett.

Lo! Christmas Comes Again

Come, glory night! Come, spirit light!
Come, joy, thy sweet bells ringing!
Behold! His star is shining bright;
The angel choir is singing.

But near—too near, the cannon's roar,
The shield and saber's rattle;
The Christmas anthems sound no more,
Across—the field of battle.

Oh, Christmas spirit! Calm our fears,
Close down in pity stooping.
Alas! Thine eyes are filled with tears,
Thy radiant wings are drooping.

The happy bells, the joyous bells
That set the echoes rolling
Through silent streets and frosty dells,
Are slowly, sadly tolling.

Come, glory night! Come, spirit light!
Come, joy, thy mute bells ringing!
Through clouds the star is shining bright;
Far off the choir is singing.
—Clara E. Putnam, in Oklahoma Farmer.

ANIMALS ARE NOT FORGOTTEN

Birds and Beasts Share in the Christmas Cheer in the Scandinavian Countries.

The Christmas customs in Norway and Sweden are the most interesting of any country. It is a time of great rejoicing. To show that there are amicable feelings between every one in the household the shoes are placed in a row at night in the hall when retiring on Christmas eve, and, like the German custom, candles are left burning in the village windows all night to light the way for "Kristine," who brings the gifts. The Christmas tree is largely decorated with candles and pretty cakes arranged in bright-colored baskets—all usually homemade.

The richer households send good things to the poor, and everywhere among both rich and poor are the animals and birds remembered. The boys and girls save up their pennies during the year for this purpose. Sheaves of grain are fastened to the window ledges in town, and in the country the sheaves are fastened to long poles and renewed every day for a week, and many are the birds that spy this feast. On the barn floors of the peasants bowls of hot porridge are set for poor "Robin Goodfellow" to comfort him because he has no "soul." The cows and the horses share in the general happiness by having a double share of food given them.

Be Joyful.

Radiate as much of the Christmas spirit as possible.

SOIL FERTILITY EITHER BORROWED OR STOLEN

It Must Be Replaced Sometime

There's a certain amount of fertility in your soil. If you take some out, you should replace it, just as you would return borrowed money. If you don't pay back what you borrow, you are practically stealing. If you don't repay your friend after the first time you borrow, you are not likely to get much of a loan the second time, and when it comes to a bank, if you don't pay your obligations there—well, you will have to some way. In the matter of fertility, the trouble is that our soil is too good a friend. We can borrow, borrow, borrow—not getting so much each time, of course—until we finally conclude there is not much more to get from our friend and we are at liberty to move away, if we want, and cultivate another friendship.

This, at least, used to be the case but there is practically no more virgin land and what we have will have to be taken care of.

Reaching Limit of Fertility

Few of us realize how very little fertility in proportion to the whole bulk of the soil there really is. In a ton of ordinary black clay loam, there are only 3½ pounds of nitrogen, 3½ pounds of phosphorous, and 60 pounds of potash. When these are exhausted, they are gone, that's all.

The best and cheapest general purpose fertilizer and the one that contains the three elements above mentioned is barnyard manure. A ton of it contains 5 pounds of nitrogen, 3½ pounds of phosphorous and a much larger quantity of potash. It is worth at present prices for commercial fertilizers about $5.50 a ton, according to Pennsylvania Experiment Station Circular No. 67.

$600 Worth of Manure on Average Farm

Supposing you have the average number of stock on the average farm —6 cows, 3 horses and 10 hogs. These will, according to U. S. Farmers' Bulletin 192, produce about 110 tons of manure per year. At $5.50 per ton, those 110 tons will have a total value of about $600.

How much will you get in return for that amount of manure? That all depends on how you handle it.

Director C. E. Thorn of the Ohio Experiment Station says that eight loads put on with a spreader are worth as much as twelve put on by hand. This means a loss of one-third of the above amount—about $200 if the manure is spread by hand. It is hard to realize that the unevenness of hand spreading would make that much difference in comparison with even machine spreading. A good spreader doesn't cost near as much as that loss of $200.

Advantages of Wide Spread Spreaders

In buying a spreader at the present time the farmer should see that he selects one with a wide spread attachment. With such an attachment a strip 8 feet wide or better can be covered, extending well outside the wheels on both sides. This has positive advantages over the narrow spread spreader of years ago. In the first place, the load is thrown off twice as fast and the same amount of ground is covered with just half the driving distance, and on the return it is not necessary to drive so that the wheel tracks lap in order that all ground may receive an even spread. For practically the same price today a wide spread spreader can be bought that will deliver more in service and includes more in quality of construction than an old type machine that only spreads the width of the beater. For these reasons the wide spread machine should be thoroughly investigated before a farmer invests his money in a spreader.

A spreader is the most necessary implement on the farm today. It is a crop producer, whereas most other machines are only crop handlers. It encourages the saving of manure and thereby makes the farmer honest with his soil. He borrows his fertility and doesn't steal it.

America's Entrance the Decisive Factor in the Mighty Struggle in Which Democracy Triumphed Over Irresponsible Autocratic Militarism.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD.

Autocratic militarism, imbued with an overpowering greed for world domination, started the Great War.

Democracy, inspired with decency and common sense, ended it.

"All wars are commercial" is a saying that is true of all modern wars. The greatest war of all time, just ended, was no less so than others, for though it was made by the military class of Germany, it was for the benefit of commercial Germany, for the conquest of the trade of the world.

Ever since the defeat of France in 1870 and the formation of the German empire the ruling classes of Germany had been assiduously preparing for the mighty struggle that began in 1914. Secretly at times, with brazen frankness at others, they laid their plans, built up their mighty military machine, extended their espionage system to all lands with the aid of the business houses and the diplomats. Though warned by more than one student of affairs, the world in general ignored all this or looked on it as merely boastfulness and legitimate trade competition.

Germany's plan was nothing less than an enormous conspiracy to establish what the conspirators knew as "Mittel Europa," a dominion extending from the North sea to the Persian gulf. As preliminaries, German princes were placed on thrones of middle Europe wherever possible, and financial relations were established that gave Germany virtual control over the coveted countries. Then the Hun autocracy impatiently awaited "The Day."

Excuse Was Ready-Made.

Merely an excuse was needed to precipitate the conflict, and this was afforded on June 28, 1914, by the assassination of Archduke Ferdinand of Austria and his wife in Sarajevo, Bosnia, by a Serbian. That this crime was inspired to serve as a pretext is evidenced by the fact that everything was prepared a few days in advance for putting the German military machine in motion. Austria, under orders from Berlin, made demands on Serbia to which no self-respecting nation could submit, and on July 28 declared war on its neighbor. Russia, as ally of and sponsor for Serbia, mobilized its armies at once, despite the protests of Germany, whereupon the kaiser declared war on Russia. France, being in offensive and defensive alliance with Russia, was compelled to mobilize, and the kaiser's armed forces got into action at once. The course of events so far had been foreseen by the German high command and it was in accordance with its prearranged plan, which was to crush France by a swift advance on Paris, and then to turn about and make an end of Russia's military resistance.

On August 2 German troops entered France at Cirey and began moving through Luxemburg, despite the spirited protests of the grand duchess, and Berlin asked Belgium to permit the passage of troops through that country. This was refused, the king of Belgium appealing to the powers that had guaranteed the neutrality of his kingdom.

All this time Great Britain had been striving to avert the outbreak of a general war, and Germany rested complacently on the information of her spies that the British would not enter into the conflict. But Berlin reckoned without the British spirit of fair play and faithfulness to treaties, and when the kaiser tore up the "scrap of paper" and invaded Belgium Great Britain jumped to the rescue. Her mighty fleet was mobilized and her army, pitifully small, began moving across the channel. Then events came with dazing rapidity. One after another the nations fell into line against the Germans and Austro-Hungarians, but the Teutons were ready and the others, except France, were not.

The Invasion of Belgium.

On August 5 began one of the most shameful chapters in the history of the world—the rape of Belgium. King Albert and his heroic little army resisted to their utmost, but the supposedly impregnable forts of Liege, Namur and other Belgian towns were speedily reduced by the Hun cannon and the land and its people were made captive. The atrocities committed by the Germans, officers and privates alike, will remain a blot on the name of Germany to the end of all time. The world has been so well informed concerning those brutal crimes that it is unnecessary to recapitulate them.

Having overrun all but a narrow strip of Belgium, the Hun armies began what Berlin fondly believed was to be a triumphal march to Paris. England's little regular army was thrown across their path and fought and died almost to a man, and side by side with them the French Poilus contested every foot. They were pushed back slowly but surely until the Marne was reached and crossed by the invading hosts and the capital seemed to be within the grasp of the Huns. Then came forward the first heroic figure of the war, Marshal Joffre of France. Commandeering every motor vehicle in Paris, he rushed to the front the entire force left to defend the capital and in a mighty battle along the Marne the Germans were defeated. They had spread out too much and permitted their right flank to be turned and were driven back to the northeast. Reaching lines prepared with this possibility in view they "dug in" and then began a period of trench warfare that lasted for three years, in the course of which there were no remarkable gains of territory by either side.

Under the management of Lord Kitchener Britain's millions were being enlisted and trained and transported to the battle grounds. Not only from the homeland did they come, but from Canada, Australia, New Zealand, India, South Africa and all of the far-flung possessions of the empire, with an ardor that settled for all time the question of their loyalty to that empire. Ireland alone held back to a considerable extent, hoping to gain independence and making itself the hatching ground for many a German plot. Kitchener's great work practically accomplished, he went to his death when a German submarine sank the cruiser on which he was going to Russia.

Germany's Submarine Warfare.

In the first months of the war the British fleets, aided by the Japanese, took away Germany's island colonies, and then, having almost full mastery of the seas, established a blockade of Germany designed to starve her into submission. The reply to this was quick in coming. The Germans started out their submarines at once, and began building more and bigger undersea vessels. Disregarding the recognized laws of warfare, they declared unrestricted war on all vessels of their enemies, and a murderous career that finally resulted in dragging the United States into the conflict and bringing defeat to themselves. The first notable victim of this method of warfare was the Lusitania, more than a thousand of whose passengers perished. On this and many another vessel that was sent down by the submarines were American citizens, and there was a powerful demand on our government to stop the practice or to enter the war.

For nearly two years President Wilson held back, writing numerous notes of protest to Berlin and receiving an equal number of false promises. Early in 1917 Berlin announced that submarine warfare thereafter would be unrestricted—as it had been in reality most of the time—and there was nothing left the United States but to declare a state of war with Germany. This was done on April 6 and from that fateful day the doom of Germany's great conspiracy was settled.

America's Wonderful Effort.

With amazing energy and speed America went at the tremendous task of making an army out of its civilian population. There were many mistakes and many delays, but these are almost forgotten in the contemplation of the marvelous success with which the thing was accomplished. After a long and heated debate, the selective draft system of raising an army was adopted, and young men by the hundred thousand were taken from their civilian pursuits, put in immense training camps and made into soldiers. To command them, thousands of officers were trained in other camps. In the incredibly short time of one year nearly two million fighting men, as efficient as the world has ever seen, had been transported across the Atlantic, with all the vast supplies required; and at home the industries of the land had been reorganized for the business of war. Knowing well the arduousness of the task of winning the war, the government bent every effort to it and the draft age limits were extended to include all men between the ages of eighteen and forty-six. Many thousands of those thus drafted were in training when the war came to a close.

America's arrival in France was most timely. Though the crown prince had failed miserably in his attempt to force a way to Paris by the Verdun route in 1916, the Germans never gave up their plans to take the French capital, and in the spring of 1918, with re-enforcements released from the eastern front by the collapse of Russia, they began a powerful drive in northern France. In the first stage of this they reached the Somme, and in the second they got to the Marne again, only 55 miles from Paris.

Yankees to the Rescue.

The Yankees, who were getting their final training behind the lines, had not yet seen very much action, but in this crisis their commander, General Pershing, offered their immediate services to the British and French. Brigaded with the allies, they went into battle with a rush that inspired the tired Tommies and Poilus, and the advance of the Huns was checked. General Foch, France's master strategist, was made supreme commander of the allies in the west, and he at once began delivering the series of terrific strokes that ultimately forced the Germans back to their own borders. Fighting with the French, the Americans had a big part in clearing out the Marne salient; fighting with the British, they gave great help in the allied victories further north. Then the First American field army was organized, placed on the extreme west of the line and there wiped out the St. Mihiel salient and started on the operations that in less than two months cut the enemy's lines of communication from Metz and threatened the capture of all his forces left in France.

"When Russia's vast man-power gets into action Germany will be crushed as under a steam roller" said everyone in 1914, and for a time this prediction bade fair to be realized. The Russians invaded East Prussia and were making fine progress there and in Poland, which was kept up, with some reverses, until early in 1915, when Von Hindenburg administered to them a succession of terrific defeats. These were not due so much to the military supremacy of the Germans as to the shameful betrayal of the Russian armies by corrupt officials who left them almost destitute of arms and supplies. From that time on Russia's main successes were won against the Austrians and were temporary. Demoralization steadily spread through the czar's dominion, fostered by German agents, and the outcome was the deposition of Nicholas and his dynasty and the establishment of a confused semblance of government by the soviets of the soldiers, workers and peasants—a condition that remains to be cleared up, though the power of the bolsheviki is rapidly waning.

Italy, Once Defeated, Triumphs.

Italy, declaring that the terms of the Triple Alliance had been violated by Austria, entered the war on the side of the allies on May 23, 1915. Turkey had gone in with Germany before the war was three months old, and Bulgaria cast her lot with the Teutons in October, 1915. The fortunes of the Italians were spectacular. They won over the Austrians for a long time and invaded the regions of Italia Irridenta along the Adriatic, threatening Trieste. Then subtle Teuton propaganda, coupled with defeatist work at home, brought disaster on them. Helped by German divisions, the Austrians made a tremendous drive and forced the Italians back to the Piave river line. There the contest stood for many months, until the middle of June, 1918, when under General Diaz, the Italians not only stopped another offensive, but turned it into a great defeat and rout which culminated in the surrender of Austria. This was hastened by the falling to pieces of the Austro-Hungarian empire, the states of which were establishing their independence, following the lead of the Czecho-Slovaks.

Turkey, with the aid of Germans, administered to Great Britain two setbacks that were rather humiliating. The first was at the Dardanelles, which the British tried to force, first with navy alone, then with land and sea forces. Both attempts were disastrous failures. The other defeat by the Turks was in Mesopotamia, where General Townshend and his army were captured at Kut-el-Amara. Both these reverses were more than compensated for by the later conquest of Mesopotamia and the Holy Land and the consequent surrender of Turkey.

As for Bulgaria, she was beaten largely by the regenerated Serbian army, which had great assistance from the French, Greeks and British. Serbia had been wholly overrun in the first few months of the war, but her spirit never died out and in the late summer of 1918 she not only regained her own, but forced Bulgaria to her knees.

Roumania kept out of the conflict for some time and then joined the allies, though they would have preferred that she remain neutral. She invaded Transylvania and at first threatened to give Austria a great deal of trouble, but Germany came to its ally's aid, Russia collapsed and Roumania was forced to give up.

Warfare in the Air.

The most picturesque side of the great conflict has been the war in the air. It was quickly seen that the airplane would play a big part in the war, and every belligerent nation soon had powerful air fleets. The machines were enlarged and improved beyond all imagining, and from mere observation planes became fighting and bombing machines of vast importance. Except for observation purposes, the lighter than air craft were utilized only by Germany. She pinned her faith to the great dirigible Zeppelins, but these on the whole proved a dismal failure. True to her savage policy, Germany waged unrestricted war from the air as on land and sea. Her Zeppelins and planes repeatedly attacked London, Paris and innumerable other unfortified cities and towns, and her airmen made a practice of bombing Red Cross hospitals.

Long before the war closed the allies had established their supremacy in the air, and equal to the best of their flyers were the gallant Americans who entered that branch of the service.

Another novelty of the war was the tank. This machine, based on an American invention and first developed by the British, came as a complete surprise to the Germans and they fled in terror from its bristling guns and its crushing weight. They tried making tanks for themselves, but never caught up with the improvements brought out by the allies.

The net results of the Great War cannot be stated yet. But they include, first and foremost, the downfall of irresponsible autocracy and militarism and the beginning of a spread of democratic rule that will embrace the world. The fallen monarchs include the kaiser, the czar of Russia, the kings of Bulgaria, Bavaria, Wuerttemberg, Saxony and Montenegro and King Constantine of Greece, and probably the emperor of Austria. The people are in the saddle and if they keep their heads and submit to intelligent leadership, they will remain there indefinitely.

The Color Line

By ISOBEL FIELD
of The Vigilantes

Race prejudice is shifting from America over to the battlefields of France. As the pride of our negro soldier grows in this country a very violent dislike for him is spreading all along the German front. In more than one place the color line and the front line of battle merged into one—to the rage and dismay of the Hun.

The Teuton prejudice against color would be even more intense if Germany could know what the American negroes are doing in every department of war work. Our enemies have felt the force of negro valor as exemplified by Henry Johnston with his bolo knife and Needham Roberts with his stack of bombs; but there is more behind.

Of the stevedores, George Freeman, the American labor contractor (who took 1,500 of them to France), says: "They are the finest workers you ever saw. One negro can do four times as much work as any other man, and have fun doing it. The French stevedores stand by and look on with amazement at my hustling gangs. The way they handle a 100-pound crate makes the Frenchmen's eyes bulge."

In the shipbuilding yards the whirlwind methods of the negroes have caused a sensation both in this country and in England. Charles Knight, a colored man, won the prize for fast riveting—25 pounds in money—from Lord Northcliffe and a letter from that Englishman which says: "Your world's record feat of driving 4,875 rivets on May 16th has set for American shipbuilders the fast pace that is necessary for carrying on the war successfully. Such an achievement as yours carries across the seas an inspiring message of American domination and ability."

Negro Women in France.

Seven hundred volunteer negro women are in France working in the huts and canteens of the Y. M. C. A., and there are many colored secretaries in this same noble service abroad. The Red Cross is placing colored trained nurses in the base hospitals in this country, and is considering the plea of 3,000 graduate negro nurses for overseas service.

All over the country 12,000,000 colored Americans are loyally backing the government with their hard-earned money. Out of their wages and savings they invested $7,000,000 in three issues of the Liberty Loan bonds. They gave one million in the first Red Cross drive and two million in the second, besides investing four million in Thrift stamps. This fine record cannot be told in terms of money alone, for it is the spirit that counts, and the spirit of the colored Americans is passionately loyal.

Now, when a new loan is to be launched the negroes will be found well prepared to meet it. They have learned more about their government in the last year than they ever knew in their lives before. The growing sympathy and appreciation of their patriotic efforts by the white people have given them confidence. The success of the colored troops abroad have thrilled them with a pride that will express itself in renewed efforts.

During the last year many new societies have been formed among the colored people and these, with the old established ones, have been actively and intelligently engaged in war work.

Doing Great Service.

They have formed committees to sell Liberty bonds and Thrift stamps; they have helped the two Red Cross drives; they care for the dependents of negro soldiers; they send comforts to their troops abroad; they have opened their canteens in several large cities for the benefit of negro soldiers on leave, and they meet to knit, sew and roll bandages. All this work has been so well organized that the varirious societies are now civic centers well prepared to launch any patriotic service with every appearance of success.

In the magazines and many newspapers published by the negroes every effort is being made to encourage their readers to the utmost. Race troubles; the ignominy of "Jim Crow" cars in the South; the delay of the Red Cross in sending trained colored nurses abroad; the antinegro riots in Philadelphia, have all been passed over with the urgent plea that personal grievances be forgotten in the one great unanimous aim—to win the war.

With such a spirit animating our colored Americans the government may rest assured that Liberty loans, like the black troops at the front, will go "over the top" with enthusiasm. Well may Germany wish to draw the color line!

KAISER AND HIS FOOTSTOOL

By EDITH M. THOMAS
of the Vigilantes.

A German woman, arraigned as "enemy-alien," is reported to have said, "I would kiss the kaiser's feet."

Here's a talking footstool—on my word!
I, who thought a footstool dumb, have heard
How one "made in Germany" can talk—
Better yet, I hold, to see it walk!

You would "kiss the kaiser's feet," you say;
It were best to let you have your way;
Here you are but out of place—and so,
Straight to Wilhelmstrasse you should go!

The Fighting Irish

By NORREYS JEPHSON O'CONOR
of The Vigilantes

Where are the fighting Irish? This question has often been asked in the past few months by those who have continually wondered that Irishmen could traffic with Germans and, under the name of Sinn Fein, endanger civilization. Those who complain thus have forgotten that noble band of Irishmen and Irishwomen which has been supporting the war since August, 1914. Officers and men of the Irish Guards, the Connaught Rangers, the Munster and Dublin Fusiliers, and of other Irish regiments, have contributed some of the most distinguished pages of the history of the war by their deeds of valor, not to speak of the achievements of men of Irish birth and traditions in other regiments from Great Britain and from overseas. The name of the Irish Guards will ever be associated with the retreat from Mons, as the names of the Munster and Dublin Fusiliers will be associated with Gallipoli.

It is not too much to say that the most noted Irishmen in every walk of life have been supporting the war and have not been connected with the plans and purposes of the Sinn Fein group. Lord Ardee, heir of the Earl of Meath, the famous commander of the Irish Guards, and the Earl of Kingston, who, though seriously wounded, returned to the trenches, are typical of the long list of gentlemen well-known in Irish society who in four years of war have found the frontiers of Ireland facing the German invader. Lord Dunsany, the most-talked-of Irish writer today, has been with the Inniskilling Fusiliers since the outbreak of hostilities; his protege, Francis Ledwidge, the Meath peasant poet, who has won a permanent place in Irish letters, was a lance corporal in Lord Dunsany's regiment and fell in action a year ago. Major William Redmond, member of parliament, and the witty Tom Kettle, professor of economics in the National university in Dublin, both gave their lives for the allied cause. Lieutenant Kettle in his posthumous volume, "Ways of War," has given the Irish opinion of the burners of Louvain; and yet there are some people who assert that if Kettle were now alive he would side with the Sinn Fein party. The answer is in Kettle's volume.

Among the women, the Countess of Kingston has given time and energy to the Shamrock Funds for the assistance of Irish soldiers disabled at the front. Miss W. M. Letts has been working in a hospital ever since the war began, but has not been too busy to write in "The Spires of Oxford" some of the most beautiful poems of the war; while Katharine Tynan has published three books of war poetry.

These are only a few representative names taken from a large number. To this number belongs the future of Ireland; their voices will speak with authority at the peace conference, and with them will rest the successful settlement of the Irish question. The fighting Irish are in this war where they have been in every war, battling for liberty and supporting the cause of civilization.

THE APPEAL TO FEAR

By RAYMOND S. SPEARS
of the Vigilantes.

Nothing is more astonishing than the Prussian belief in the efficacy of fear, of the value of frightening the English, the French, the Americans and the other races with horrors twice confounded. To find its analogy it is necessary to turn to the savage races of men, to Indians with their horrid medicine men masks, to the dancing and howling idol votaries of the African tribes, and to the grotesque images of the island peoples of the Pacific ocean.

It is most extraordinary that the Prussians should try with science and mechanical ingenuities and spirit-conjurings to do by complications what the simplicity of the savage tribes tried to do by red and blue paint, the carved heads of dream-land brutes and waving snakes around their heads.

We see the wireless used to spread rumors of disasters that never happened, just as the wild men used to shriek of death or torture. The Prussians report horrific engines of death, which are but the same as the ancient poisoned arrows and medicines to make men under test sick and pale.

What is the meaning of the belief that frightening people can serve against the allies? A German professor, with his myopic spectacles and long discourses on psychology, does declare that when men are afraid they are easily whipped in a fight. The Teutons believe the professor, who has advanced no further than the medicine man of old who faced strangers with painted masks and incoherent shriekings.

The fact seems to be that away down in the Prussian heart there is a certainty that fear is efficient; knowing what a gripping, cold-sweating thing terror is, he believes the other fellow must be afraid, too, and the great problem of life is to scare the other fellow more than oneself.

A bully, believing himself invincible, does often present a "strong" front, but his appeal is to fear, since he does not himself know real courage.

Had to Give Up Work

Mr. McMurray Was In a Bad Way Until He Used Doan's—They Brought a Quick Cure.

P. K. McMurray, 48 W. Hickory St., Chicago Heights, Ill., says: "I was always a strong man until I was taken with kidney trouble. I worked many years as a blacksmith and this work brought the trouble on. When I stooped over there was a grinding pain in my back and I couldn't straighten up for four or five minutes. Sometimes it took me half an hour to put on my shoes. I got so bad, I had to lay off work for days at a time. Often I would have to get up a dozen times at night to pass the kidney secretions, and they burned like fire. My feet swelled, and at times they bulged so that it seemed I was standing on a hot stove. I had spells of gasping for breath and dizzy spells, too, and my health failed rapidly. I was told that my working days were over, but Doan's Kidney Pills were brought to by attention and before I had used one box, I began to feel relieved. I kept on and by the time I had used ten boxes, I was absolutely cured. All pains left my back and other symptoms of kidney trouble disappeared and I felt as well and strong as ever."

Carolyn of the Corners

DODD, MEAD AND COMPANY.

PRINCE PROVES HIMSELF A REAL CANINE HERO AND WINS APPROVAL OF THE CORNERS.

Synopsis.—Her father and mother reported lost at sea when the Dunraven, on which they had sailed for Europe, was sunk, Carolyn May Cameron—Hanna's Car'lyn—is sent from New York to her bachelor uncle, Joseph Stagg, at the Corners. The reception given her by her uncle is not very enthusiastic. Carolyn is also chilled by the stern demeanor of Aunty Rose, Uncle Joe's housekeeper. Stagg is dismayed when he learns from a lawyer friend of his brother-in-law that Carolyn has been left practically penniless and consigned to his care as guardian. Carolyn learns of the estrangement between her uncle and his one-time sweetheart, Amanda Parlow, and the cause of the bitterness between the two families.

Aunty Rose remained, apparently, as austere as ever, while Joseph Stagg was quite as much immersed in business as formerly. Yet there were times, when she and the child were alone, that Mrs. Kennedy unbent, in a greater or less degree. And on the part of Joseph Stagg, he found himself thinking of sunny-haired, blue-eyed "Hannah's Car'lyn" with increasing frequency.

"Didn't you ever have any little girls, Aunty Rose?" Carolyn May asked the housekeeper on one of these intimate occasions. "Or little boys? I mean of your very own."

"Yes," said Aunty Rose in a matter-of-fact tone. "Three. But only to have them in my arms for a very little while. Each died soon after coming to me. There was something quite wrong with them all, so the doctors said."

"Oh, my dear! All three of them?" sighed Carolyn May.

"Two girls and a boy. Only one lived to be three months old. They are all buried behind the church yonder."

The next morning early Carolyn May, with Prince, went over into the churchyard and found the three little stones in a row. She knew they must be the right ones, for there was a bigger stone, with the inscription, "Frank Kennedy, beloved spouse of Rose Kennedy," upon it.

The names on the three little stones were Emeline, Frank, Jr., and Clarissa. Weeds and tall grass had begun to sprout about the little, lozenge-shaped stones and about the taller one.

While she was thus engaged, a tall man in black—looking rather "weedy" himself, if the truth were told—came across the graveyard and stood beside her. He wore a broad band of crepe around his hat and on his arm, and was very grave and serious-looking.

"Who are you, little girl?" he asked, his voice being quite agreeable and his tone kindly.

"I'm Car'lyn May, if you please," she replied, looking up at him frankly.

"Car'lyn May Stagg?" he asked. "You're Mr. Stagg's little girl? I've heard of you."

"Car'lyn May Cameron," she corrected seriously. "I'm only staying with Uncle Joe. He is my guardian, and he had to take me, of course, when my papa and mamma were lost at sea."

"Indeed?" returned the gentleman. "Do you know who I am?"

"I—I think," said Carolyn May, doubtfully, "that you must be the undertaker."

For a moment the gentleman looked startled. Then he flushed a little, but his eyes twinkled.

"The undertaker?" he murmured. "Do I look like that?"

"Excuse me, sir," said Carolyn May. "I don't really know you, you know. Maybe you're not the undertaker."

"No, I am not. Though our undertaker, Mr. Snivvins, is a very good man."

"Yes, sir," said the little girl, politely.

"I am the pastor here—your pastor, I hope," he said, putting a kind hand upon her head.

"Oh, I know you now!" said Carolyn May brightly. "You're the man Uncle Joe says is going to get a strangle hold on Satan now that vacation is over."

Rev. Afton Driggs looked rather odd again. The shocking frankness of the child came pretty near to flooring him.

"I—ahem! Your uncle compliments me," he said drily. "You don't know that he is ready to do his share, do you?"

"His share?" repeated the puzzled little girl.

"Toward strangling the Evil One," pursued the minister, a wry smile curling the corners of his lips.

"Has he got a share in it, too?" asked Carolyn May.

"I think we all should have," said the minister, looking down at her with returning kindliness in his glance. "Even little girls like you."

Carolyn May looked at him quite seriously.

"Do you s'pose," she asked him confidentially, "that Satan is really wicked enough to trouble little girls?"

[illegible] bit of new philosophy thus suggested, and Mr. Driggs shook his head in grave doubt. But it gave him something to think of all that day; and the first sermon preached in The Corners church that autumn seemed rather different from most of those solid, indigestible discourses that the good man was wont to drone out to his parishioners.

"Dunno but it is worth while to give the parson a vacation," pronounced Uncle Joe at the dinner table. "Seems to me his sermon this morning seemed to have a new snap to it. Mebbe he'll give old Satan a hard rub this winter, after all."

"Joseph Stagg!" said Aunty Rose admonishingly.

"I think he's a very nice man," said Carolyn May suddenly. "And I kep' awake most of the time—you see, I heard poor Princey howling for me here, where he was tied up."

"Hum!" ejaculated Mr. Stagg. "Which kept you awake—the dog or the minister?"

"Oh, I like Mr. Driggs very much," the little girl assured him. "And he's in great 'fliction, too, I am sure. He—he wears crepe on his hat and sleeve."

"Huh, so he does," grunted Mr. Stagg. "He's 'most always in mourning for somebody or something."

"Do you s'pose, Uncle Joe, that he looks up enough? It does just seem to me as though poor Mr. Driggs must always be looking down instead of looking up to see the sunshine and the blue sky and—and the mountains, like my papa said you should."

Uncle Joe was silent. Aunty Rose said, very briskly for her:

"And your papa was right, Car'lyn May. He was a very sensible man, I have no doubt."

"Oh, he was quite a wonderful man," said the little girl with full assurance.

It was on the following morning that school opened. The Corners district school was a red building, with a squatty bell tower and two front doors, standing not far up the road beyond the church.

Miss Minnie Lester taught the school, and although Miss Minnie looked very sharply through her glasses at one, Carolyn May thought she was going to love the teacher very much.

Indeed, that was Carolyn May's attitude toward almost everybody whom she met. She expected to love and to be loved. Was it any wonder she made so many friends?

There proved, however, at the start, to be a little difficulty with Miss Minnie. Prince would not remain at home. He howled and whined for the first half of Monday morning's session — as Aunty Rose confessed, almost driving her mad. Then he slipped his collar and tore away on Carolyn May's cold trail.

Into the school marched the dog, having drawn the staple with which his chain had been fastened to the bole of the tree in Mr. Stagg's back yard.

Miss Minnie was both alarmed and angry. Some of the little girls shrieked and wept when Prince pranced over to Carolyn May's seat.

"If you do not shut that awful dog up so that he cannot follow you here, Carolyn May, I shall speak to your uncle, Mr. Stagg, about it. Ugh, the ugly beast! Take him away at once!"

So Carolyn May's schooldays at The Corners did not begin very happily, after all. She had always loved and been loved by every teacher she had ever had before. But Miss Minnie seemed prejudiced against her because of Prince.

The little girl felt badly about this, but she was of too cheerful a temperament to droop for long under the pressure of any trouble. The other children liked her, and Carolyn May found plenty of playmates.

It was on the last Friday in the month that something happened which quite changed Miss Minnie's attitude towards "that mongrel." Incidentally, The Corners, as a community, was fully awakened from its lethargy, and, as it chanced, like the Sleeping Beauty and all her retinue, by a Prince.

The school session on Friday afternoons was always shortened. This day Mr. Brady, one of the school trustees, came to review the school and, before he left, to pay Miss Minnie her salary for the month.

Carolyn May had permission from Aunty Rose to go calling that afternoon. Freda Payne, whom she liked very much, lived up the road beyond the schoolhouse, and she had invited the little city girl to come to see her. Of course, Prince had to be included in the invitation. Freda's family understood that, and Carolyn May took him on his leash.

They saw Miss Minnie at her desk when they went past the schoolhouse. She was correcting written exercises. Carolyn May secretly hoped that her own was much better than she feared it was.

Not far beyond the schoolhouse Prince began to growl, and the hair stiffened on his neck.

"Whatever is the matter with you Prince?" demanded Carolyn May.

In a moment she saw the cause of the dog's continued agitation. A roughly dressed, bewhiskered man sat beside the road eating a lunch out of a newspaper. He leered at Carolyn May and said:

"I guess you got a bad dog there, ain't ye, little girl?"

"Oh, no! He's us'ally very polite," answered Carolyn May. "You must be still, Prince! You see," she explained, "he doesn't like folks to wear old clothes. If—if you had on your Sunday suit, I'm quite sure he would not growl at you."

"He wouldn't, hey?" said the man hoarsely, licking his fingers of the last crumbs of his lunch. "An' suppose a feller ain't got no Sunday suit?"

"Why then, I s'pose Prince wouldn't ever let you come into our yard—if he was loose."

"Don't let him loose now, little girl," said the fellow, getting up hurriedly and eyeing the angry dog askance.

"Oh, no, sir. We're going visiting up the road. Come away, Prince. I won't let him touch you," she assured the man.

The latter seemed rather doubtful of her ability to hold the dog long, and he hobbled away towards the school house.

Carolyn May had a very pleasant call—Freda's mother even approved of Prince—and it was an hour before the two started for home. In sight of the school house Prince gave evidence again of excitement.

"I wonder what is the matter with you now," Carolyn May began, when suddenly she sighted what had evidently so disturbed the dog.

A man was crouching under one of the schoolhouse windows, bobbing up now and then to peer in. It was the man whom they had previously seen beside the road.

"Hush, Prince!" whispered little Carolyn May, holding the dog by the collar.

She, too, could see through the open window. Miss Minnie was still at her desk. She had finished correcting the pupils' papers. Now she had her bag open and was counting the money Mr. Brady had given her.

"O-o-oh!" breathed Carolyn May, clinging to the eager dog's collar.

The man at the window suddenly left his position and slipped around to the door. In a moment he appeared in the schoolroom before the startled teacher.

Miss Minnie screamed. The man, with a rough threat, darted forward to seize her purse.

Just then Carolyn May unsnapped the leash from Prince's collar and let him go.

"Save Miss Minnie, Princey!" she cried after the charging dog.

Prince did not trouble about the door. The open window, through which the tramp had spied upon the schoolmistress, was nearer. He went up the wall and scrambled over the sill with a savage determination that left no doubt whatever in the tramp's mind.

With a yell of terror the fellow bounded out of the door and tore along the road and through The Corners at a speed never before equaled in that locality by a knight of the road.

Prince lost a little time in recovering his footing and again getting on the trail of the fleeing tramp. But he was soon baying the fellow past the blacksmith shop and the store.

The incident called the entire population of The Corners, save the bedridden, to the windows and doors. For once the little, somnolent village awoke.

Prince continues to prove that he is a very important character in this story. The next installment tells how he is concerned in another incident that may be heard from later. Don't miss this.

Naughty Mamma's Boy.

My husband, who is at Camp Sherman, wrote home and told us this joke the boys played on a "mamma's boy" who was the goat of the whole company. One night while he was over to the Y. M. C. A. they fixed up the head of his cot with sticks and tied a string to them, then waited until he got sound asleep and pulled the strings, out came the sticks and down went the bed. He nearly exploded he was so mad and my husband said had you been listening you could have heard him swearing clear home.—Chicago Tribune.

All in Some Day.

One day at a Southern camp one of the negro soldiers was showing me a service pin with three stars which he always carried in his pocket. I asked him who the relatives were and he replied: "One is fo' maself an' the other two is fo' ma brudders; one is going to enlist an' the other is in the next draft."—Exchange.

IN THE LIMELIGHT

ONE OF THE ZEEBRUGGE HEROES

Lieut. H. T. C. Walker of the British navy is one of the heroes of the British naval attack on Zeebrugge. The story of that wonderful exploit has been told time and time again, but not long since the admiralty issued its own full and absolutely reliable account. Here, for the first time, are given the names of officers who took part in the enterprise, while it now becomes known that Vice Admiral Keyes directed the operation from the destroyer Warwick.

H. M. S. Vindictive, which has blocked Zeebrugge harbor ever since, sustained the greatest losses when the enemy's searchlight discovered her and the shore batteries opened with a veritable storm of shells, all concentrated on the one vessel. It will be remembered that 18 gangways led from the ship to the mole, and when contact was made there was almost a race between officers and men as to which would be first to reach the scene of their deadly but thoroughly effective labors. It was while swarming up the gangways that a great many of the men were killed and wounded.

Lieutenant Walker had his arm carried away by a shell on the upper deck of the warship, and lay in the darkness and confusion while the storming parties raced over his prostrate body. He was recognized and dragged aside by his commander. With his remaining arm he waved a greeting. "Good luck to you," he called as his friends had to leave him. Happily he was rescued and is still able to do his country good service, while his name is one of those which will never die as long as the history of the great war is read.

MRS. LANSING'S WAR WORK

© HARRIS & EWING

When Mrs. Robert Lansing, wife of the secretary of state, arrives at the department of state auxiliary of the Red Cross in the morning she is usually completely surrounded by balls of gray wool, parcels containing hospital clothing materials or mysterious-looking boxes.

If one is given the liberty of peeping into the mysterious-looking boxes wonderful evening gowns, dazzling opera cloaks, masculine garments, ranging from storm coats to tuxedos, and a variety of other apparel are likely to reward the inspection.

But Mrs. Lansing hasn't been doing the family shopping. She is simply bringing down articles for the state department's war work. The wool, of course, is to be knitted up into warm garments for soldiers and sailors, and the multitudinous beautiful garments, which may show a little bit wear here and there, are to go into Mrs. Lansing's bandbox sales. The bandbox sales have become noted in Washington. Every one gives to them, from members of the cabinet and their wives to the latest recruit among the little war workers.

All is grist that comes to Mrs. Lansing's mill. The H street headquarters buzzes with activity, and the beautiful gowns and hats that once gave added charm to the loveliness of Washington beauties are speedily turned into scores of garments that give comfort to our boys overseas.

HAS ONE LEG AND NINE CROSSES

At the bureau of Russian engineers in the Flatiron building, New York, is to be found a young man who has but one leg but who, despite that handicap, has won nine crosses by his gallant work as an aviator. He is Lieutenant Commander Prokofieff-Seversky of the Russian naval air service, and he is not yet twenty-five years old.

It was only by great good fortune that Prokofieff-Seversky and his mother managed to get away through Siberia to America five months ago. Where his father, his little sister and his young brother are he does not know; he has had no word from them. He has grave fears for his father and brother, who were officers in the military aviation service.

His father, a barytone in the Russian opera, was a pioneer air pilot in Russia, and in 1910 owned two airplanes, so that when war came he had himself and his two sons ready to offer themselves as flyers. The emperor gave the elder Seversky an officer's commission. The son now here went into training at Sebastopol, lost his left leg in an accident, and in spite of that won his commission. He developed into one of the bravest and most capable men in the service and had many desperate adventures.

NO. 1 IN AMERICAN ARMY

John Quincy Adams of Pittsburgh, Pa., a member of the New York hospital unit which left New York for France one month after the United States entered the war, holds a unique position in the American army.

Mr. Adams was with the first American unit of any type to reach France after the declaration of war, and his early service, combined with the composition of his name, led to his being "No. 1" on the American army roll in France. He is one of the few American soldiers in France with three gold bars upon his arm for service, and he has seen ample to support the most virulent attacks upon German brutality and to support the most optimistic belief in the valor, fitness and effectiveness of the American soldier.

Having been graduated from a technical school in Pittsburgh, Mr. Adams was in New York to begin the study of lithography early in April, 1917. Everything was in readiness for a start on this work when President Wilson took the action which resulted in a declaration that a state of war existed. It seemed to Mr. Adams no time for lithography, and within two days after the entrance of America into the struggle was announced he was attached to the hospital unit which brought forth the first roar of cheers in London and Paris as the first tangible evidence of America's war preparation.

Temperance Notes

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

"THE NATION DRY NEXT JULY"

With prohibition for the period of the war and thereafter until the termination of demobilization, and prohibition by federal amendment in effect early in 1920 (as seems sure), it may be said that John Barleycorn will be, after July 1st, 1919, forever banished from these United States. So far from wishing him on other and less favored lands, the temperance hosts are already engaged in a world-wide offensive which will make him an outcast from every corner of the earth—the "man without a country"—no abiding place on sea or land.

As for that particular unit of the temperance army, the National W. C. T. U., its occupation will not be gone after it has reached the goal of national constitutional prohibition. This point is clearly set forth in an official letter sent by Miss Anna A. Gordon, president, to every state W. C. T. U. We quote:

"Some of our friends not close students of the temperance reform, are short sighted enough to say that with the securing of nation-wide prohibition through ratification of the federal amendment, the work of the W. C. T. U. will be accomplished and our activities should be directed into other channels. On the contrary, we believe we may rightly claim that our greatest constructive work will then begin. Our educational propaganda under the new conditions of nation-wide prohibition will become even more necessary than in the past. All our educational lines of work that concern young people and boys and girls should at once receive our whole-hearted, vigorous attention. The children of today must hold the prohibitory law tomorrow. The appetite for alcoholic liquors and the avarice of the would-be liquor dealer will not become extinct when this nation-wide law becomes operative. Locally we shall continue to be in offensive and defensive struggles with the direst foe of the child and the home; our best efforts will be needed to help establish substitutes for the saloon and to aid in the election of officials committed to the new law and to its strict enforcement. Our program of social service after the prohibition law goes into effect will have new and vital features and we should be alert in our preparedness. With added time and funds at our command, our fascinating and compelling lines of service among foreign-speaking people; on behalf of moral education; child welfare; the welfare of women in industry; the education of women voters; anti-narcotics, anti-vice and many other important departments, can be pushed with new zeal and helpfulness. True to its character as a pioneer the W. C. T. U. will forge ahead in the social service activities of the new dry nation and in its mighty national and international program."

LIQUID LOGIC.

The American soldiers are learning from their French and British comrades to love wine and beer in France, without which no civilized soldier can and will fight, much less gain victories. And "when Johnny comes marching home" he'll sound the death knell to parson-made American prohibition.—Brewers' Journal.

The liquor journals would have the people believe that success of American arms in France is due to booze! These boys were trained in cantonments in the United States surrounded by dry zones, were prohibited from buying or receiving as a gift, intoxicating liquors. Total abstainers, everyone of them, and after they arrived in France strong liquor was denied them and even the use of light wines and beer discouraged by declaration of their commander in chief. And yet the booze journals of America, by some strange process of reasoning, figure it out that it is booze that inspired them to victory over the beer-drinking Hun. Great is the logic of booze makers and booze apologists.—American Issue.

NO RUM RATION

In his new book on "The Warfare of Today," Lieutenant Colonel Azan, of the French army, testifies: "I am not in favor of the practice of distributing alcohol before going to the attack. I have never given it out to my men, and I have never regretted this policy; they have always done better without it. I suppose that a certain number of soldiers, affected by alcohol, without being actually drunk, lose their sense of danger; they then expose their lives uselessly in a way they would not do had they all their wits about them. Probably it is just to remove this anxiety that they ask for alcohol. In my opinion alcohol is not needed for troops with a finely tempered morale."

SALOON BUILDINGS TO BECOME APARTMENTS

New York brewers owning saloon properties are reported by the New York Journal to be preparing to turn them into small tenements. It is said the plan is looked upon by the government and city officials as very practicable and patriotic.

"An unthinkable thing has happened," says the Texas Advance. "Prohibition has nearly ruined our rescue mission in Houston. Since the saloons went but there is nobody to rescue."

Red Cross Department

Now that the war is ended, the Red Cross will take up much needed refugee work. An order has been issued that no more surgical dressings be made and that the present quota of garments be completed speedily, that this work may be taken up at once. For this reason, the ladies of St. Joe and surrounding country are urged to come to the sewing rooms on Friday afternoon of this week.

Fred Knott, chairman of DeKalb county chapter of the Red Cross, honored this auxiliary with a complimentary call at the sewing room last Wednesday afternoon.

The American Red Cross has concluded an arrangement with the National Tuberculosis association under which the former appropriates $2,500,000 to aid the anti-tuberculosis work of the latter and allied organizations, hitherto supported by the sale of Christmas seals. The usual sale of these seals will be omitted this year; but each Red Cross member will be awarded ten Christmas seals enclosed in a small folder, which will contain educational matter regarding tuberculosis.

The Red Cross Christmas roll call will be supported by all the anti-tuberculosis associations.

The war council sends greetings to the chapters of the American Red Cross on the occasion of their annual meetings of 1918. With these greetings come gratulations on the great work of the chapters during the past year; and, above all things, on the wonderful spirit of sacrifice and patriotism which has pervaded the work.

For the period up to July 1, 1918, American Red Cross chapters, through their work rooms, have produced 490,120 refugee garments, 7,123,621 hospital supplies and 192,748,107 surgical dressings

Want to Tell Others

Mrs. Susan Taylor, of Paulding, Ohio, says: "About two years ago, I suffered a general breakdown. I was nervous, my heart fluttered and I could scarcely drag around. I was simply miserable. I got no relief until I used Glando Tonic. The first treatment helped me. I continued the treatment until I am well. I gladly recommend Glando Tonic to others who suffer as I did.

Glando Is Her Doctor Now

Mrs. A. E. Roebuck, of Latty, Ohio, a lady 71 years old, says: "I had for several years suffered from liver, kidney and heart trouble. I had soreness, swelling and pain in my right side, I was constipated and bothered, with short breath and a full or bloated feeling after eating. At times, my heart palpitated and, other times, it was weak and I would feel faint. I often awoke frightened or in a startled condition. Since I have used Glando Tonic, I am so well that I have decided to let Glando be my doctor in the future."

These ladies, like many others, were filled with poisonous matter caused from a sluggish condition of the liver and other glands. As soon as the poison was removed, their bodies took on new life and health was restored.

Most aged people are troubled with sluggish glandular system; and unless they use something occasionally to relieve this condition, they are miserable. These people find Glando Tonic to be just what they need. If your druggist hasn't it, insist on his getting it for you; or send directly to the Glan-Aid Co., Fort Wayne, Ind. Large $1.00 size only.

Notice of Final Settlement of Estate

Notice is hereby given to all persons interested in the estate of McKinley McCurdy, deceased, to appear in the DeKalb circuit court, held at Auburn, Ind., on the 16th day of December, 1918, and show cause, if any, why my final settlement accounts with the estate of said decedent should not be approved; and said heirs and all others interested are notified to then and there make proof of heirship or claim and receive their distributive shares.

Witness, my name, this 18th day of November, 1918.

Mother's Thanksgiving

She used to start the week before,
Preparing for the day,
Peeling apples, cracking nuts—
You know the cozy way.
Getting cook books from the shelves,
Her glasses on to see
Receipts for cooking wondrous things,
For her four boys and me.
Thanksgiving morning, when the smells
Of turkey and mince pie,
Began to steam about the house
She breathed a happy sigh.
Her four boys now have gone to war,
A proud sigh stirs her breast,
Her service flag sports four bright stars,
The mother bears the test.

Special Reasons Why Every American Should Be Grateful at This Season

Be thankful that you are living in the most important era in the world's history and bearing a part in the momentous events which will be a landmark for all time to come. Be thankful that through the blood and suffering of three years' terrible warfare the issues at last stand out sharply, and that we are fighting on the side of right and against might; for democracy and against autocracy and military despotism.

Be thankful that our great nation has the strength and vigor, the spirit and stamina, the men and resources to throw into the balance at the critical time, thereby insuring victory for justice and humanity.

Be thankful that the United States will sit at the Peace Council, when the time is ripe, defending the rights of the small nations and peoples, insisting upon a square deal for all.

Be thankful that our land has not been invaded, our people murdered, our cities laid waste, as have those of Belgium, Serbia, Roumania and parts of France and Italy.

Be thankful that we are far enough from the scene of strife to miss most of its horrors, but near enough to take an active and deciding part in the struggle; that our farms and factories, mines and marts are spared to produce the supplies so urgently needed by our allies.

Be thankful that we have an army and navy composed of the best material in the land; our bravest sons sent forth to fight for the world's freedom, as their great-grandfathers fought for our freedom.

Be thankful that we were not afraid or dismayed when the summons came, but stepped forward, prepared to bear a man's part in the struggle and to help slay the beast that threatens the liberties of the world.

Be thankful that when this war is over and the victory won, the issues settled, there will be no more war; for the so-called divine right of kings and emperors—the right to exercise despotic sway over their subjects—will be no more.

Greatest Day of Thanksgiving That Our Beloved Nation Has Ever Known

A FEW years ago we were thankful because we were rich and powerful and safe; now we may be thankful because we are humbly trying to be brave and self-sacrificing and virtuous. Therefore this is by far the greatest Thanksgiving day that this nation has known. The day, therefore, should be not only one of thanksgiving but of consecration. The American people can now see that there is in this world something greater than the accumulation of wealth, and that life has values which they have not before appreciated. After all our efforts to eliminate pain from the world, we may learn that pain has a high disciplinary value—that there is such a thing as perfection through suffering.

Our sacrifice in behalf of the world's peace, safety and honor is just beginning to be offered. Treasure and life will have to be poured out in unstinted measure if this war is to be won—as it will be. The American people should be deeply thankful that they are called to this great service, which is nothing more than the return that they owe to humanity for the wonderful blessings that have been showered upon them.

"That I may know the fellowship of His sufferings"—such was the prayer of the apostle. Through their participation in the sorrow and suffering of their brethren the American people may develop a purer, stronger, more exalted and spiritual life than any they have hitherto known. The very somberness with which the day is enshrouded ought therefore to serve to glorify it. This year, of all years, we are thankful not for what we have but for what we are able to do, and for the opportunity and will to do it.

THANKFUL

I AM thankful that, lying on my back in tall grass, atop a hill, I have watched white clouds sail over a sky of measureless blue.

I am thankful that on a moonlit night in the desert I have heard the heartrending throb of an Indian chant bearing a dying chief to a heaven as real as the desert peaks, purple and black on the dim horizon.

I am thankful that I know a New England town, elm-shadowed, silent, with a graveyard too large for it, wherein lie men and women who begot the Nation in the name of God, and laid them down to die in deathless faith.

I am thankful that I have seen youngsters diving in an old swimming hole, that I have seen lovers strolling in April twilights, that I have smelled sagebrush after rain, that I have seen babies take their first step, that I have known pain and death, laughter and tears, and work with blistered hands and with a back aching from heavy toil.

But most of all I am thankful that I am living today so that, with the rest of thinking humans, I am witness of the birth of a new code for nations, a code so deep, so high, so filled with justice that one must believe the prophecy of Revelation to be coming true. As one with aching heart and streaming eyes must be thankful for the pains of motherhood which bring a new soul to earth, so I am thankful for the heroic agony of the Allies, which is bringing a new spirit to the nations of the world.—Delineator.

"Keep the Bridge Open"

A dangerous condition exists among the American people today. We are an easy-going people, quick to feel that what we want to happen is about to come to pass. Don't forget that for four long years the Hun was master of the offensive power of this war. The Allies have scarcely had the offensive for as many months, yet we are feeling that peace is at hand.

Remember, the war has never touched German soil, and it must touch a lot of it if the war spirit is to be taken out of Germany. There are many aeroplanes on the docks in New York, waiting for ships. We have troops delayed through lack of ships. Put yourself in the place of the men who are fighting, and consider what ships and more ships represent to you. Chairman Hurley of the Shipping Board, and Charles M. Schwab say we have completed 2,500,000 tons, but we must continue till we get 15,000,000.

The shipyards need men badly. "No person now engaged in shipyard work need apply," but other men looking for a place where red-blooded, real men are needed, and who want to get good wages for the winter's work, will do their country and themselves a good turn by writing or calling at the Great Lakes Engineering Works, River Rouge, Detroit, Mich. Get into the shipyard game.—Adv.

ST. JOE NEWS.

VOL. XXXII ST. JOE DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 28 1918 NO. 4

Goes to the Country

Martin D. Engle let the light of his countenance fall upon St. Joe—for a time, at least—last Saturday, and withdrew to the quiet of "rooral solitood." He may be expected back about the time the "robins nest again"—perhaps, sooner. He will be missed by his friends here, and you can bet your last shekel without fear of losing that he will miss his friends. Good-bye, Mart. Hurry back!

To quit joking and use plain English, Mr. Engle makes his home with his son-in-law, Roy Wade; and the latter found it necessary to move to the old home place, south of Coburntown, for the winter. The Wade family moved Saturday and he went with them. But—!

When Mr. Engle returns everyone will give him the "glad hand" and say: "Hello, Mart! glad to see you back."

NOTICE

Barney will be closed all day on Thanksgiving.

Sub-District Convention

The Fort Wayne sub-district of the Methodist Protestant church will hold a convention at this place beginning Tuesday evening, Dec. 3, and concluding the following Thursday evening. Representatives from twenty churches of the district will be present and take part in the program. Rev. S. Heininger, of New Haven, will preside.

An interesting program has been prepared, and the exercises at each session will center around a genera theme. Following is an outline ot the same:

Tuesday Evening.—Opening.
Wednesday Morning —Church program.
Wednesday Afternoon.— Patriotic meeting.
Wednesday Evening.— Evangelistic services.
Thursday Morning.—Financial program.
Thursday Afternoon.—The Church
Thursday Evening.— Evangelistic services.

These meetings will be worth attending by people of St. Joe, irrespective of church affiliations; and everybody is invited to attend.

To Welcome Boys Home

The ladies of the Red Cross have begun to plan a welcome for the soldier boys when they return from the service. This is a work that requires time and forethought; and as they want to do it right and show proper appreciation for the services of the home comers, the arrangements will not be made public until they are perfected. Of course, the welcome will be of a public nature, but it will be under the auspices of the Red Cross ladies.

In order that the boys may be given a rousing, enthusiastic welcome, someone has to take the lead; and this duty the ladies have taken upon themselves. When the program is a arranged, a public meeting will be called.

Nelson Buys Grange Hall

The Newville Grange hall changed hands last Saturday, E. D. Nelson buying it and the quarter-acre of land upon which it stands. He thereby squares up his farm, as the land he purchased formerly belonged to it; and, years ago, was sold for school purposes and was the site of the Nelson school house. The Grange afterward secured it.

The Grange was organized about six years ago and, at first, flourished, having a membership of over a hundred; but the interest declined, and last spring it disbanded for want of support. Having no further use for the building, the trustees—William Lenherr, Wilmot Coburn and Sherman Meek—disposed of it to Mr. Nelson. Consideration, $180.

Prominent Man Gone

M. Boland, one of the most prominent and philanthropic citizens of the county, died at his home in Auburn early Sunday morning, aged 64 years, death being due to heart trouble. Funeral services were held at the residense at 1:30 p. m. Tuesday, conducted by Rev. F. A. Hall. Deceased is survived by his wife, a son and two grandchildren.

Mr. Boland took an active part in all reform work, and was a trustee of the Y. M. C. A. at the time of his death. He served in several public capacities: he was a member of the city school board for years, was postmaster under Cleveland and was county recorder for eight years.

R. A. Walker Is Coming

R. A. Walker, field worker of the Indiana Christian Endeavor Union, is billed to speak at St. Joe on Wednesday evening, Dec. 18, at the M. P. church. Notice to this effect has been received from the county Christian Endeavor president, Robert L. Lanning, of Butler, and he urges a good audience for the speaker. The subject, "The West Point of the Church," will be of as much value to the older folks as to the Christian Endeavorers, and St. Joe should turn out in large numbers to hear this "live wire" carrying a real message."

New B. & O. Time Card

A new time card went into effect on the Baltimore & Ohio railroad last Sunday. Two St. Joe trains are affected by it: the westbound local, which was due here at 11:11 a. m., now leaves here at 11:32; and No 6 comes an hour earlier, being due here at 9:15 p. m. There is no change in the eastbound 7:57 a. m train.

The railroad company ignores the ruling of the state public service commission, which is to the effect that St. Joe be made a regular flag stop for No. 6. Instead of this, the train is scheduled to stop to let off passengers from Auburn Junction only.

Chicken Supper

The aid society of the Concord M. P. church will serve a chicken supper to the public on Thanksgiving evening, Nov. 28, in the basement of the church, from 5:30 to 7:30. Price, 25c. Program follows.

"The German idea of a good soldier is one who breaks all the rules," said a government official. The soldier who kills the most babies, murders the most women and poisons the most wells is the best soldier, according to the German idea.

"The Germans remind me of the youth who said to his father:

"'Father, I have saved $10—the first money I ever saved in my life. Naturally, I feel rather proud of myself.'

"'Good!' said the father. 'So you've saved $10, eh? How did you do it?'

"'Last night,' the youth chuckled, 'I lost $10 in a poker game and then refused to square up.'"

PISO'S

Old-Clothes "Clinics" the Fashion.

To be up to date these days your community should have an old-clothes clinic, the department of agriculture suggests. Not the amount you spent on clothes but the amount you save is the criterion by which you are judged in this year of war. The home demonstration agents usually hold the clinics, and old garments are brought, ripped and made over by the women under their direction. This wool-conserving campaign in Iowa is particularly strong.

LOOK AT CHILD'S TONGUE IF SICK, CROSS, FEVERISH

HURRY, MOTHER! REMOVE POISONS FROM LITTLE STOMACH, LIVER, BOWELS.

GIVE CALIFORNIA SYRUP OF FIGS AT ONCE IF BILIOUS OR CONSTIPATED.

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, it is a sure sign that your little one's stomach, liver and bowels needs a gentle, thorough cleansing at once.

When peevish, cross, listless, pale, doesn't sleep, doesn't eat or act naturally, or is feverish, stomach sour, breath bad; has stomach-ache, sore throat, diarrhœa, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of the little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again.

You needn't coax sick children to take this harmless "fruit laxative;" they love its delicious taste, and it always makes them feel splendid.

Ask your druggist for a bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly on the bottle. Beware of counterfeits sold here. To be sure you get the genuine, ask to see that it is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company." Refuse any other kind with contempt.—Adv.

Why They Are Cheerful.

LATE STYLES ON LIST EACH WEEK

New York.—To the layman, it may appear that the excitement in new clothes dies down about Thanksgiving day. To those in the trade, writes a fashion authority, and to those who follow the movements of the trade, this is far from a dull season.

The American designers have acted quite cleverly during the last two years. They use the tactics of Marshal Foch. They do not let any sector of the long line of apparel rest serene from attack, and while they do not make a grand offensive, except twice a year, they disturb parts of the line at frequent and close intervals.

When the sector of skirts seems settled into comfortable quarters, they drive in a wedge and change the silhouette or the treatment of detail sufficiently to make the public perk up with interest.

When the condition in jackets appears to be well settled in trenches, they destroy the serenity by throwing over grenades which break up the line, change the arrangement of the neck, and shorten the length.

They do not cease from troubling. By this constant manœuvering for surprise, they keep the public from losing interest in the industrial battle. Their patrols are constantly going over to France to get new information to bring back in order that a small flank or frontal attack can be carried out with success. They do not permit women to feel confident of their clothes because they were well chosen in October.

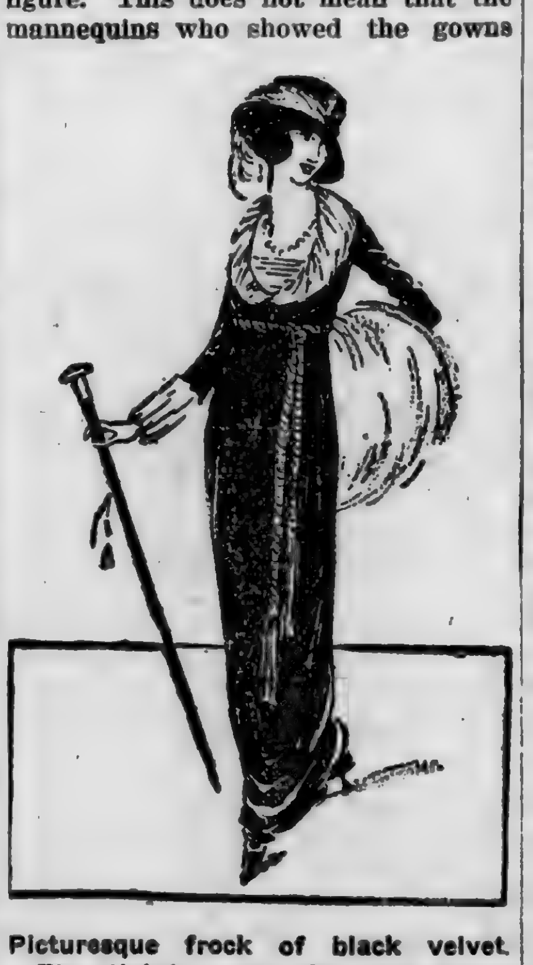
Details of Changes.

It might make interesting reading to run over the fashions of last month and those of this month at the points where they differ. In other days, we would have called it the stabilization of fashions, for November was the month to expect that kind of shaping down into settled serenity after the turmoil of October. But one does not feel that anything is stabilized today, not even in the apparel business, especially under the stimulus of new conditions. As the war changes, we change.

It might better be explained by saying that this month, much has been discarded that was considered first class in October. Those who showed their gowns late in the season practically eliminated many of the over-popular French models that arrived in September. The public, guided by these dressmakers, therefore, had the opportunity to avoid what was commonplace and overdue. Say what you will, there is a keen irritation caused by paying upwards of $200 for a copy of a French model that is in half the shop windows of the country, selling for $50. It was only natural, therefore, that changes should come about in not only the details of the gowns from one month to another, but in the ornamentation, and even in the silhouette.

Uncorseted Figure.

These later exhibitions of clothes, by the way, accentuated the corsetless figure. This does not mean that the mannequins who showed the gowns were always without corsets. Some of them were. But others wore girdles of tricot or elastic. The effect was uncorseted. That was the vital point.



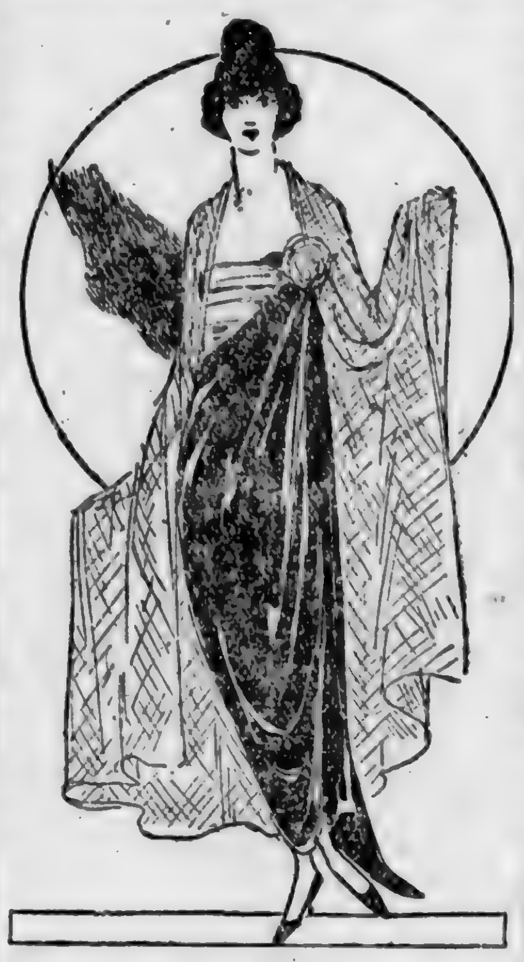
Picturesque frock of black velvet. Fits tightly over hips and forms graceful folds around feet. Collar and deep cuffs are of tucked chiffon.

Some of the greatest houses in Paris insisted upon this effect in their August exhibitions, but we have always tabooed the idea in this country. It is not possible for any but the young and slim to go about in clothes that are merely dropped from the shoulders and tied around the waist. The new effect is not only exploited by the very leaders of clothes in this country, but now it is being taken up by dozens of slim women.

One of the most interesting moves in this direction, is a return to the Directoire of Josephine and Mme. Tallien in the high waistline and the undoubted convex curve of the natural figure in front. To the average woman, this silhouette is unthinkable; to the artists, sculptors, stage folk and certain designers, it is a return to the best there is in fashions. It is impossible on the middle-aged woman, unless she has kept herself as thin as an eel.

This silhouette, as you can see, is entirely different from what has been commonly called the medieval one. True, in its original state, this was frankly uncorseted, when it was not boned to such a deep point in front that it seemed as though the woman were incased in one of the instruments of torture used by the Inquisition. This silhouette, which has come about during the last few weeks, is plainly Directoire or Roman, for the former was a copy of the latter.

Its startling innovation is the bringing about of the line of girdling the figure to the bust instead of the hips, and yet, as it is done by clever designers, it really reduces the figure to more narrowness than ever. It is used in connection with a tight, Egyptian hip-band that holds the material tightly to the figure and then allows it to drop downward to the toes and heels. So it is not pure Directoire; it is a combination of Roman and Egyptian.



This is a charming Callot evening gown of green velvet, draped with blue tulle. It is embellished with a big pink rose for the trimming.

Callot's Mummy Frocks.

The house of Callot also accentuates a change in the silhouette from what we have had from other French houses. It is nothing new under the name of Callot, for it was advanced last February and we called it the mummy silhouette, for want of a better name. The gown is really a bag, with square sleeves and tight ankles. It is in striking contrast to the straight, chemise tunics of nearly all the other French houses.

This season it is not so pronounced in its baglike proportions. It takes on more of the atmosphere of a gown intended for a live, and not a lay, figure. It pulls upward in drapery around the knees and ankles, has a closer line to the figure under the arms, and depends for its beauty upon Indian embroidery that spreads itself in sharp points down the front from shoulders nearly to knees. This is usually done in copper tones of silk floss.

Outside of this peculiar silhouette which the dressmaker exploits more than the public adopts, are the draped Roman and Grecian gowns which are also in direct contrast to the chemise tunic.

And here is another decolletage which is a change from October and which is seen in black velvet gowns; the fabric is cut to the bone of the neck in back and then downward in a deep U in front. It is edged with a three-inch collar of antique ivory lace which is slightly full, but caught to the fabric, so that it may rest flat and steady. This extends nearly to the waistline, and where the lower part rounds itself out over the figure, there is a straight tucker of flat tulle covered with lace.

This is an eighteenth century decolletage and is far more becoming to any woman than the severity of the half low, medieval line.

FASHION TIPS

The rich wrap coats are especially adapted to the use of small women.

Buttons of jet have no trouble in finding occupation at the present time.

Some of the Parisian designs show dresses with low waists and draped skirts.

For children Paris sends us velvet capes, but for grownups capes of similar character are of Scotch plaid.

Youthfulness is the keynote of all Paris designs, and results in slim, straight lines, dropped girdles, a sort of Moyen age waistline and round necks.

Frocks of velvet, devoid of trimming and cut on slim, youthful lines, are a pleasing mode of the moment, draped girdles and draped collars of the frock material being the strikingly new features.

Rose-colored and white crepe effectively combined were developed into a charming girlish frock by Lanvin, the unique feature of which is its low V neck at the back and slightly rounded line at the front.

TRUE FISH STORY.

"Splash, splash," said Tommy, the fish.

"Splash, splash," said Johnny, the other fish.

They were both swimming around a beautiful pool of a sunken garden in a part of the country where it was almost always warm.

"You know," said Tommy, and then he paused and waved a fin.

"What do I know?" asked Johnny.

"I'm going to tell you," said Tommy, "but I had to stop to wave a fin to young Sammy Fish, who just swam by. I don't want to be a snob, you know."

"What's a snob?" asked Johnny.

"A snob," said Tommy, "is a creature who thinks himself so fine that he won't speak pleasantly to his neighbors or his acquaintances or his friends. In fact, he doesn't think his friends are quite as good as he is."

"I wouldn't like a snob," said Johnny.

"No, you wouldn't, for you're sensible," said Tommy. "If you want to know the truth I will tell it to you."

"I would love to know the truth," said Johnny.

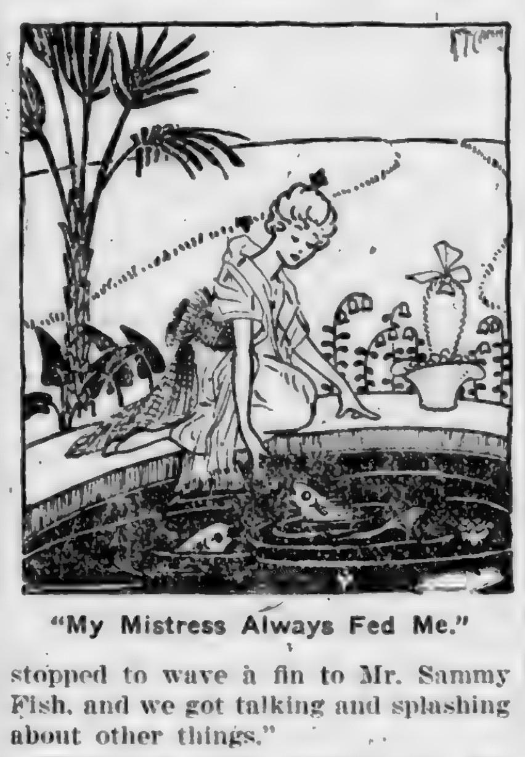
"The truth is that any creature who is silly enough to be a snob is too foolish to be a fine person," said Tommy, splashing hard.

"I believe you," said Tommy, "I believe you."

"Of course," said Tommy, "I have been here so long in this sunken pool of this garden that I know my mistress and am not in the least shy."

"Some creatures can't help being shy, but they can help being snobs," he added.

"You started in to tell me that I knew something which you were going to say," said Johnny. "Then you stopped to wave a fin to Mr. Sammy Fish, and we got talking and splashing about other things."



"My Mistress Always Fed Me."

"That's so," said Tommy, "we did. Well, I was going to tell you that you knew I was very tame."

"I knew that and I know that," said Johnny. "Pray continue."

They both swam slowly about in the lovely sunken pool, which was a beautiful pond, a little below the level of the ground.

"My mistress always fed me choice little bits from her hand, and she always laughed when I splashed hard after each bit of food I was given, for she knew I was saying: 'Thank you for the goodies, mistress dear.'

"Then I became so tame she could put her hand down in the water and stroke me, and I would wiggle my fins delightedly."

"I thought she had two hands," said Johnny.

"So she has," answered Tommy. "What makes you say that?"

"Because," said Johnny, "you said she put her hand in the water and stroked you."

"To be sure I did," said Tommy, "and that is quite true. She has two hands, but she only strokes me with one at a time. She chooses between her two hands and then decides to put one into the water. At least that is what I suppose she does. Oh, what a very particular fish you are, to make sure that I don't mean the mistress has only one hand!"

"Ah, I thought I would have a little joke," said Johnny.

Tommy grinned, a funny, fishy grin, and his eyes looked very shiny and queer.

"Do you know," he said, "that folks don't believe I am so tame until my mistress shows them! They don't think a fish could be as tame as all that. But more than that, my mistress puts her mouth in the pool just a little way and I put my mouth up a little bit and we have a nice watery kiss, my mistress and I. I am really a very unusually tame fish, but all of this is true, as you know."

"I know that every word of it is true," said Johnny.

And it all was true, for this is a really, really true story!

Music's Proper Sphere.

Music is more than an art; it is an instinct. Beneath the savage's primitive delight in the tom tom and the musician's intellectual enjoyment of a Bach fugue, is the same underlying principle—a spontaneous love of rhythm and the desire to express it. To create exquisite harmonies is the heaven-born gift of genius—the divine heritage of one man in a thousand. To interpret another's work is a talent, developed only by years of hard work and infinite patience. To listen to the perfect interpretation of a great composer is a blessed privilege.

IMMORTAL SPIRIT OF FRANCE

Woman a True Type of Gallic Character That Brute Force of Huns Could Never Crush.

A tired and dusty doughboy drew up in front of a shell-battered house in Chateau Thierry and asked a Frenchwoman if he could get a drink of water.

"Oui, mon garcon," said the woman. "You come right along with me."

After the soldier had obtained his drink and was about to depart, he remarked that her house had suffered more or less from the guns.

"Yes," was the reply, "I used it as a dressing station for the Americans who were wounded here and the Boches seemed to know about it. But it's all right. We will build it up again and everything will be the same."

She explained in detail just how she would rearrange the architecture, how the windows would be built larger.

"We will have to carry a lot of rock," she smiled. "You see, those are all shot to pieces. But it's not far to the river."

Then she turned and resumed her task of clearing away the debris that had once been the east wall of her house.—From the Stars and Stripes

"That's true enough," said Mrs. Dubbs. "I wanted you once, but if I'd known you—"

The pause that ensued was so chilly that the mercury in the thermometer on the wall broke through the glass and fell to the floor with a dull, sickening splash.

HOW MRS. BOYD AVOIDED AN OPERATION

Canton, Ohio.—"I suffered from a female trouble which caused me much suffering, and two doctors decided that I would have to go through an operation before I could get well.

"My mother, who had been helped by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, advised me to try it before submitting to an operation. It relieved me from my troubles so I can do my house work without any difficulty. I advise any woman who is afflicted with female troubles to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial and it will do as much for them."—Mrs. MARIE BOYD, 1421 5th St., N. E., Canton, Ohio.

Sometimes there are serious conditions where a hospital operation is the only alternative, but on the other hand so many women have been cured by this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, after doctors have said that an operation was necessary—every woman who wants to avoid an operation should give it a fair trial before submitting to such a trying ordeal.

If complications exist, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., for advice. The result of many years experience is at your service.

Pa's Predicament.

Jimmie—Say, pa, I thought you told me a person has only five senses.

Pa—So I did, son; what of it?

Jimmie—Why, teacher told us that some people have six.

SPANISH INFLUENZA

Do Not Fear When Fighting a German or a Germ!

By DR. M. COOK.

The cool fighter always wins and so there is no need to become panic-stricken. Avoid fear and crowds. Exercise in the fresh air and practice the three C's: A Clean Mouth, a Clean Skin and Clean Bowels. To carry off the poisons that accumulate within the body and to ward off an attack of the influenza bacillus, take a good liver regulator to move the bowels. Such a one is made up of May-apple, leaves of aloe, root of jalap, and is to be had at any drug store, and called "Pleasant Purgative Pellets."

If a bad cold develops, go to bed, wrap up well, drink freely of hot lemonade and take a hot mustard foot-bath. Have the bedroom warm but well ventilated. Obtain at the nearest drug store "Anuric Tablets" to flush the kidneys and control the pains and aches. Take an "Anuric" tablet every two hours, together with copious drinks of lemonade. If a true case of influenza, the food should be simple, such as broths, milk, buttermilk and ice-cream; but it is important that food be given regularly in order to keep up patient's strength and vitality. After the acute attack has passed, which is generally from three to seven days, the system should be built up by the use of a good iron tonic, such as "Irontic" tablets, to be obtained at some drug stores, or that well known blood-maker and herbal tonic made from roots and barks of forest trees—sold everywhere as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

Sun Bean for Him.

Mother was having home Sunday school services. A song suitable for the kindergarten worshiper was selected. Spying Uncle Harry driving up, the other children at once "cut services," but Nancy Jane continued her wavering solo, "Sun bean, sun bean. Jesus wants me for a sun bean. I'll be a sun bean for him."

FOOD FOR THE FAMILY.

National War Garden Commission

FOR cakemaking barley, corn, rice or potato flour or part cornstarch may be used without materially changing the character of the cake.

Corn and Rice Flour Jelly Roll.—Beat the yolks of three eggs, add one cupful of sugar and three tablespoonfuls of water, then add one-half cupful each of corn and rice flour with two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Fold in the stiffly beaten whites of the eggs and bake in a moderate oven ten minutes. Turn out on a towel and spread with jelly and roll. Trim the edges before rolling if at all brown.

Spiced Cornmeal Cakes.—Heat three tablespoonfuls of fat with one-fourth of a cupful of molasses and when boiling hot add one-fourth of a cupful of sugar, one-half cupful of cooked oatmeal, one-fourth of a teaspoonful of soda, and one and one-half teaspoonfuls of baking powder; cinnamon and cloves to taste, one and a half cupfuls of mixed flour, and one-fourth of a cupfuls of raisins. Bake in muffin pans 30 minutes.

Cornmeal Gingerbread.—Cook together 35 minutes one and one-half cupfuls of cornmeal, one-half cupful of corn sirup, one teaspoonful of salt, two tablespoonfuls of corn oil, one-half cupful of molasses, one and one-half cupfuls of sweet milk and one cupful of sour milk. Cool and add a beaten egg, one cupful of barley flour, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Add teaspoonful of cloves, a teaspoonful of soda, and one and one-half teaspoonfuls of ginger and cinnamon.

Chocolate Barley Cake.—Cream one-fourth of a cupful of shortening, add three-fourths of a cupful of sirup, a saltspoonful of salt, one egg, two-thirds of a cupful of cold coffee, one and three-fourths cupfuls of barley flour and one and one-half teacupfuls of baking powder. Add two squares of chocolate melted over hot water, beat well and bake 20 minutes in a moderate oven.

Corn Flour Sponge Cake.—Separate the yolks and whites of four eggs, beat the yolks, add one cupful of sugar and a tablespoonful of lemon juice, a pinch of salt and one cupful of corn flour. Sift the flour several times and fold in the stiffly beaten whites. Bake in a slow oven.

SEASONABLE DISHES.

National War Garden Commission

NO NEED is there in this day of plenty to serve monotonous meals; even substitutes may be varied so that there will always be something different. The following may not prove agreeable to all, but from these, one may find suggestions which will be helpful in varying the menus:

Mushrooms au Gratin.—Peel a half-pound of fresh field mushrooms, sprinkle with salt and let stand a half-hour. Fry one onion sliced in two tablespoonfuls of cooking oil; add two tablespoonfuls of flour and when well blended add a cupful of stock made from cooking the stems of the mushrooms. Cook until thick; add a half-teaspoonful of salt, a few dashes of pepper, and paprika. Add the mushrooms to the sauce; put into a baking dish, add a half-cupful of bread crumbs that have been mixed with one tablespoonful of sweet fat and bake until brown.

French Vegetable and Meat Dish.—Fry onions in a little fat, add soup stock, chopped meat, a few bits of chopped cabbage, carrot and potato. Cook slowly until the vegetables are tender. Add prune juice and boil five minutes. Turn the stew in a platter and surround with prunes.

Potatoes, Peasant Style.—Wash, pare and cut into dice enough potatoes to make a pint and a half; fry until brown in six tablespoonfuls of bacon fat. Remove the potatoes and add two cloves of garlic chopped, two tablespoonfuls of chopped parsley to the fat in the pan; cook for two minutes; add two tablespoonfuls of corn flour, a teaspoonful of salt, paprika and pepper to taste; two cupfuls of milk, and when well thickened add the potatoes and serve when hot.

Lemon Tapioca Pudding.—Cook a half-cupful of granulated tapioca in four cupfuls of milk in a double boiler twenty minutes. Beat two egg yolks with four tablespoonfuls of sugar and four tablespoonfuls of corn sirup. Add the grated rind of half a lemon and stir into the tapioca. Cook until thick and creamy; add one teaspoonful of lemon extract and turn into a serving dish. Beat the egg whites with two tablespoonfuls of sugar and spread over the top for a meringue. Brown and serve hot or cold.

We play at our house and have all sorts of fun,
An' there's always a game when the supper is done.
An' at our house there's marks on the wall and the stairs
An' some terrible scratches on some of the chairs

But pa and I say that our house is all right.

SEASONABLE FOODS.

National War Garden Commission

MANY are the vegetable combinations which have never been enjoyed by the vast majority of households. We continue to travel in the same old ruts, serving things as our grandmothers did before us. Let us break away from old ideas and learn something new.

Eggplant With Rice and Vegetables.—Spaghetti, noodles, rice, macaroni or bread crumbs may be used in this dish. They should all be cooked in the usual manner except the bread. For one eggplant allow one cupful of uncooked macaroni or one-half cupful of rice. Cut the eggplant in slices, pare and cut in three-fourths inch cubes. Cover with boiling water and let cook 20 minutes, then drain in a colander. Melt two tablespoonfuls of fat in a saucepan; add one large onion chopped fine, one-half of a green pepper shredded fine and let cook slowly, stirring often until yellow and softened; add the eggplant, the rice, half a teaspoonful of salt, a dash of paprika, a cupful of grated cheese and a cupful and a half of tomato. Stir and cook until well heated. Turn into a greased baking dish, cover with three-fourths of a cupful of crumbs mixed with three tablespoonfuls of fat and cook in the oven until the crumbs are brown.

Chocolate Pudding. — Melt three squares of chocolate in three cupfuls of milk, four tablespoonfuls of honey, two tablespoonfuls of gelatin; pour the mixture into a wet mold and set away to harden. Serve with sweetened whipped cream or cubes of marshmallows may be added instead of sugar.

Codfish With Brown Sauce.—Soak two cupfuls of salt fish in cold water for an hour. Drain and fry in six tablespoonfuls of corn oil until slightly brown. Add three tablespoonfuls of flour, 1½ cupfuls of water, the fish, one clove of garlic chopped, one tablespoonful of minced parsley, a few gratings of nutmeg and a fourth of a teaspoonful of paprika. Cook all together and serve on a platter surrounded by a border of cooked rice or potatoes.

What I must do, is all that concerns me, not what people think.—Emerson.

TOOTHSOME DISHES.

National War Garden Commission

IN THESE days of substitutes and conservation we need to put more thought and planning into our meals to have variety and wholesomeness.

Chatel Potatoes.—Wash, pare and slice thin one quart of potatoes; arrange in buttered baking dish. Add two cupfuls of strained tomato, two cloves of garlic finely chopped, one and a half teaspoonfuls of salt, and a teaspoonful of paprika. Bake one and one-half hours.

Chilled Eggs.—Cut six hard-cooked eggs in halves lengthwise and remove the yolks. Cream four tablespoonfuls of sweet fat with the egg yolks and six sardines, bones and skin removed, with one-fourth teaspoonful of mustard, salt and red pepper to taste. Stuff the eggs with this mixture and place on ice for an hour.

Tomatoes With Curry.—Cut the tops from six medium-sized tomatoes; remove the pulp with a sharp spoon and cook it with three tablespoonfuls of rice and sufficient boiling water until soft. Add a tablespoonful of fat, a cup of bread crumbs soaked in two tablespoonfuls of cold milk, one hard-cooked egg yolk, one-half teaspoonful salt, a clove of garlic chopped, and pepper to season; a bit of parsley and thyme and a half-teaspoonful of curry powder. Stuff the tomatoes and place in a pan with water in the bottom. Bake until the tomatoes are soft but not shapeless.

Mexican Rabbit.—Mix one cupful of freshly boiled rice with one cupful each of canned corn and tomatoes, one-half a green pepper cut in shreds, one slice of onion scraped or chopped, half a pound of chopped cheese, a teaspoonful of paprika or less, a half teaspoonful of salt and two well-beaten eggs. Turn into a well-greased baking dish. Sprinkle with crumbs mixed with melted fat and bake in a moderate oven in a dish set in water. Serve when the mixture is firm in the center.

DANDRUFF MAKES HAIR FALL OUT

A small bottle of "Danderine" keeps hair thick, strong, beautiful.

Girls! Try this! Doubles beauty of your hair in a few moments.

Within ten minutes after an application of Danderine you can not find a single trace of dandruff or falling hair and your scalp will not itch, but what will please you most will be after a few weeks' use, when you see new hair, fine and downy at first—yes—but really new hair—growing all over the scalp.

A little Danderine immediately doubles the beauty of your hair. No difference how dull, faded, brittle and scraggy, just moisten a cloth with Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. The effect is amazing—your hair will be light, fluffy and wavy, and have an appearance of abundance; an incomparable lustre, softness and luxuriance.

Get a small bottle of Knowlton's Danderine for a few cents at any drug store or toilet counter, and prove that your hair is as pretty and soft as any—that it has been neglected or injured by careless treatment—that's all—you surely can have beautiful hair and lots of it if you will just try a little Danderine.—Adv.

Tooth Brushes.

The generation of American mothers that have trained their boys to care for their teeth as the people of no other country do would glow with pride if they could trek up in the wake of our army in action and see the whole rear area dotted at sunrise with Yankee soldiers just out of battle and every man brushing his teeth. Often most of his possessions have been jettisoned in the rush of the advance.

And now abideth these three, the rifle, the shovel and the toothbrush. And the greatest of these—.

Lives 200 Years!

For more than 200 years, Haarlem Oil, the famous national remedy of Holland, has been recognized as an infallible relief from all forms of kidney and bladder disorders. Its very age is proof that it must have unusual merit.

If you are troubled with pains or aches in the back, feel tired in the morning, headaches, indigestion, insomnia, painful or too frequent passage of urine, irritation or stone in the bladder, you will almost certainly find relief in GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules. This is the good old remedy that has stood the test for hundreds of years, prepared in the proper quantity and convenient form to take. It is imported direct from Holland laboratories, and you can get it at any drug store. It is a standard, old-time home remedy and needs no introduction. Each capsule contains one dose of five drops and is pleasant and easy to take. They will quickly relieve those stiffened joints, that backache, rheumatism, lumbago, sciatica, gall stones, gravel, "brick dust," etc. Your money promptly refunded if they do not relieve you. But be sure to get the genuine GOLD MEDAL brand. In boxes, three sizes.—Adv.

WAR BOARD CHANGED STYLES

Saving That Has Been Effected in Woman's Dress and Shoes Is of Moment.

"Whether women realize it or not, there has been a saving of steel through making corsets on simpler lines. There was a shameful waste of material in shoes, but the war industries board stopped that by restricting the height, the number of styles, the variety of colors, etc." In World's Work Theodore Price tells how these and other savings were brought about "by diplomacy." He says: "Women's wear presented a delicate problem. Paris sets the styles for the ladies. Certainly gentlemen in Washington were not to be consulted. But the war industries board made a few inquiries by cablegram—the French minister of commerce and industry asked the arbiters of fashion over there a few questions—or, at least, it is presumed that he did—and the French designers suddenly awakened to a fine appreciation of the beauty of simplicity of style. The board did not dictate to American designers; it merely acquainted them with the situation. A saving of 25 per cent in the wool used in women's clothes was secured.

Another interesting saving, says World's Work, was in the number of kinds of articles. For example, there were 600 sizes and kinds of metal beds, which the board reduced to 30 and lightened 35 pounds per bed; 287 varieties of auto tires were reduced to nine. In the vacuum cleaner business alone the war industries board found a way to conserve 1,000,000 feet of fabric hose.

Death of Mrs. Ryan

ELECTA JANE (HERRICK) RYAN was born at Norwalk, Ohio, on Aug. 11, 1833; and departed this life at her home near Orangeville, Ind., on Nov. 15, 1918, aged 85 years, 3 months and 4 days.

Deceased was the daughter of Lott and Lola (Sutliff) Herrick. She was one of nine children, six sons and three daughters, namely: Alonzo, Albert, David, Col. Orson Q., Capt. Henry J. and Capt. George W. Herrick, Catherine Goodell, Caroline Coats and Electa J. Ryan. All of the children were born in Ohio excepting the youngest, George W. Herrick. Mrs. Ryan is survived by one brother, all the others but him preceding her in death.

The family moved from Norwalk, Ohio, to DeKalb county, Indiana, in 1838, locating on the farm where Mrs. Ryan died. The family lived continuously on this farm, Henry J. now being on the same place. He and his sister made their home together since the death of his wife, in 1910. Lott Herrick, the father, died in 1871, and the mother in 1873.

Deceased was united in marriage to Charles M. Ryan in 1875 No children were born to this union. In early life she united with the Christian church, and remained a steadfast and consistent member until her death.

Besides her brother, Mrs Ryan is survived by nephews and nieces as follows: Drs. W. L. and Frank Goodell, of Effingham, Ill., and Mrs. Katie Mitchell, of St. Louis, children of Catherine Goodell; Frank Coats, of Modesto, Cal.; Dwight O. Herrick, of Laramie, Wyo.; Mrs. Hope Herrick Henry, of Louisville; Lott R. and Lyle G. Herrick, of Farmer City, Ill.; Corp. Wayne D. Herrick, A. E. F. in France; Lieut. G. Wirt Herrick, Camp Taylor, Ky.

Electa J. Ryan's life covered a long span of years. She saw this country grow from a wilderness to blossoming, blooming empire. She saw this nation go through four victorious wars. She saw the development of the steam engine, the telegraph and the telephone and the more modern improvements. She knew the privations and experiences of the pioneer and the comforts of of today. Her life was truly Christian in conception and character. She was good, modest and unassuming and was filled with the Christian graces. Her life, with its many years, was beautiful in her faith and reliance in God through the stress and storms of earthly vicissitudes. She lived her life the appreciation and practice of peace on earth and good will to all. She always listened to and answered the call of the needy. Her charities were many, but never publicly made. The world is better that lived.

Fifteen Million Tons of Shipping

Building 15,000,000 tons of shipping is the big job laid out for American Shipyards. It will take years to do this. Men working in shipyards are assured of steady jobs if they make good. This great fleet of ships must be built. The United States is going to become the first maritime nation of the world.

We need men accustomed to out-of-doors work to help us build ships. The pay is set by the Emergency Fleet Corporation under direct Government control, and is higher than ever before in the history of the industry. Do not hesitate because you have never worked in a shipyard before. We will train you for some good job and will pay you well while you are learning.

It will take us years to build our share of 15,000,000 tons.

A shipyard is the ideal place to make good money this winter. Get in touch with us, either by calling at yard or by writing to us immediately. Some of our best jobs are open right now. Great Lakes Engineering Works, River Rouge and Detroit, Mich.—Adv.

Visits His Old Home

A. J. Collins, of Ford, Miss., for many years prior to his going south a resident of Concord township, returned to his old home for a visit, coming on Thursday of last week and going away on the first of this. While here, he stayed at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Ray Reasoner. From here, he went to Van-Wert, Ohio, where he has relatives. He is the same genial Collins of yore, his smile as bright and his voice as cheery as ever; and time has touched him but lightly, for he doesn't appear a day older than when he moved away, seven years ago.

Mr. Collins' boys are all in the army and he is working for Uncle Sam in the ship building yards at Mobile, Ala. He reports that the members of his family are all well. He contemplates returninng to Indiana in the spring.

St. Joe Is Defeated

The first basketball of the season was played at the opera house last Friday evening, the opposing teams being Waterloo and St. Joe high schools. The visitors won, the final score being 50 to 29 in their favor. At the end of the first half, Waterloo had a lead of 28, the score being 36 to 8. In the second half, St. Joe outplayed Waterloo, making 21 to 14; but the visitors' lead was too big to overcome. There was a preliminary game bethe Freshmen and Juniors of St Joe high school, the latter winning by a score of 6 to 1. Following is the line-up of the main game:

Waterloo		St. Joe
Gorge	Forward	Kinsey
Brandon	"	Perry
Fales, E	Center	Tuftison
Ernhart	Guard	Perkins
Fales, C	"	Koch

The visitors are a manly bunch of boys and played a clean game. St Joe has no excuses to make for being defeated, but—

Our boys want a return game.

With the Churches

The Concord township Sunday school convention will be held at the Lutheran church on Sunday afternoon and evening, Dec. 8. A special program has been prepared for the afternoon, dealing with the problems of our local schools, and it will prove to be one of great interest to the community at large.

Mrs. Ann Abel spent Wednesday forenoon at Hicksville.

Miss Pauline Andress, of Garrett, visited her parents, Marshall Andress and wife, over Sunday.

MITTENS
Good line leather mittens at Barney's

Miss Anna Moss, of Nova, Ohio, is here helping her sister, Mrs. John Hart, to care for her sick children. They are all improving.

H. Morton Carpenter, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, is spending a few days with his wis wife. Mrs. Carpenter was formerly Miss Olive Gratz, west of Spencerville, who for several years was a railroad telegrapher in the west. Mr. Carpenter is a railway mail clerk.

Union Service

The Union Thanksgiving service will be held at the Church of Christ on Thursday evening, beginning at 7 o'clock. There is much for which we should be thankful at this season and the community is urged to gather at the House of Worship on this day and render unto God, praise for his goodness to us as a people and a nation.

Fred Jenkins and wife are home again, having moved into town from the Erick farm the first of the week. He will continue to do the chores at the farm until the new tenant takes possession.

SPENCERVILLE

Rolla Moffett, of Auburn, was a Sunday afternoon guest at the Jacob Baltz home.

Mrs. Vern Wilmot returned home on Wednesday, after visiting several weeks with her cousin, Mrs. Laura Willard, of Marshalltown, Iowa.

In the recent war works drive, Spencerville school victory girls raised $41.50; victory boys, $53.50; Coburntown victory boys and girls, $15.00.

MEN
If it is for men to wear, we have it. Barney.

Mrs. Katheran Morrison and three grandchildren, of Cleveland, spent several days the latter part of the week at the home of the former's sister, Mrs. Vern Wilmot and family.

The basketball game that was to have taken place here between the Monroeville and local teams last Saturday evenings was postponed on account of "flu."

Frank W. Rhodes and wife, Rev. and Mrs. A. K. Mumma and Mrs. Florence Buchanan were Friday guests of friends at Fort Wayne; and, on Saturday, Mrs. John House and Miss Minnie Wilmot visited at the same place.

Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Rhoades and daughter, Doris, Mrs. Goldsmith and daughter, Pearl were Sunday dinner guests of Mr. and Mrs. William Lucas, and afternoon and evening guests were G. C. Lucas and wife and Harvey Beam and wife.

Mrs. W. G. Erick, chairman of the furlough house drive, has received word that Spencer township stood second highest in the county in the drive. The C. C. club gave $5.00; J. A. G. club, $7.00; Coburntown, $3.00; individuals, $71.55; total, $86.55.

Dr. and Mrs. J. C. Emme on Thursday entertained a number of little folks in honor of the fourth birthday anniversary of their son, Richard. A good time is reported. Those present were Mary and Jennie Wade, Glenn Beams, Forest Brettian, Dwight Bryan, James Vallieu, Richard Chapman, Henry Markle, Lynn Fischer and Earl Steward.

Mesdames Minta Rhodes, James Vallieu and George Beams motored to Auburn on Wednesday afternoon in the interests of the Red Cross. The ladies will sew next Tuesday at their new room in the K. of P. hall.

Prepare a Welcome

A meeting was held on Tuesday evening at the M. E. church to make arrangements for the home coming of our soldier boys. The followig organization was perfected:

Home Welcoming Captain.—John Koch, who will choose three assistants.
Music.—Mrs. A. K. Mumma.
Assistants.—George Beams, Mrs. Minta Rhodes, Mrs. W. G. Erick Mrs. James Vallieu, Miss Bertha Thornburgh, Mrs. Clyde Hart, Mrs. Thurman Shull and William Allen.
Eats.—Fred High.
Solicitors.—J. W. Henderson, Mr. Tustison, Frank Beams and Clyde Hart.
Drum Corps.—James Vallieu.
Lookout.—Lloyd Wade.

Epidemic of "Flu"

An epidemic of influenza has broken out at Spencerville; and, as a result, our neighboring village is under a strict quarantine. School has been closed and all public gatherings prohibited. About twenty-five cases have been reported, some of them of a serious nature. Among these are Lloyd Wade, Wabash agent, and his family, Forrest Beams, David Mumma and William Allen and family and a daughter of Earl Tustison, east of town.

Applies to the Kaiser

The armistice that ended the war was signed at the eleventh hour of the eleventh day of the eleventh month. The figure 11, when taken in connection with the Bible, seems almost prophetic when "Kaiser Bill" is substituted for "Solomon." I. Kings xi, 11, is the eleventh verse of the eleventh chapter of the eleventh book of the Bible and reads as fellows:

"Wherefore, the Lord said unto Solomon: Forasmuch as this is done of thee and thou hast not kept my covenant and my statutes, which I have commanded thee, I will surely rend thy kingdom from thee and give it to thy servant."

Miss Norma Brown was home from Butler over Sunday, visiting her mother, Mrs. Elma Brown.

Henry Carey on Monday bade his St. Joe friends good-bye and left for his home at Youngstown, Ohio.

J. C. F. Abel went to Huntington on Friday for a few days' visit with their son, Glen Abel, and wife.

John Bash and wife expect to leave within the next two weeks for their new home at Battle Creek, Mich.

Carl Bassett on Thursday went to Wabash, where he began work Friday for the Service Motor Truck company.

Mrs. David Furnish and baby, of Detroit, came Wednesday to visit the former's parents, Marshall Andress and wife.

Bert Bechtol and family, of near Waterloo, were the guests of Mrs. Bechtol's mother, Mrs. R. Wiers, and children, Sunday.

Merritt Milliman and Harvey Hull, who are attending military school at Wittenberg college, were home over Sunday.

Frank Scholes, who had been working for the preceding few months at Newport News, Va., returned home on Friday.

Miss Margaret Carson, of South Connellsville, Penn., arrived Sunday morning for a week's visit with Walter E Peterson and wife.

A. J. Collins, of Ford, Miss., Ed Krafft and wife, John Bash and wife, Mrs. Fred Badman, Mrs. Brown and Mrs. Tom Brunson and baby were all Sunday guests at the A. D. Brunson home.

The I. O. O. F. lodge of St. Joe is now very comfortably located in its new quarters over the postoffice. The room has been completely remodeled and put in shape to meet the needs of the organization, and will be used until the members decide what they will do permanently.

Another of our citizens has the "flu." Meade Baker went to Wabash two weeks ago Tuesday, and on Friday of that week was attacked by the disease and has been quite sick. It is thought that he contracted the influenza on the train while en route to Wabash. He is improved at this writing.

The policy of the state council of defense in regard to the German language in churches is that every effort should be made by churches to use English in their services and instructions; but it is not desired that the older members of the congregations, who have been used all their lives to services in German and who would find it difficult to understand them in English, be deprived of the services in the only language they understand. What is desired is that a sincere and positive effort be made to convert all services as quickly as possible from German into English. This may be done by having the services in English and then explaining or outlining them in German for the benefit of the older people. It is desired, however, that the younger generation become used to services and instructions entirely in English and that no effort be made to cater to their supposed better knowledge of German.

The Dawn of Peace

When the mantle of peace has been spread over battle-scarred Europe, we must plan for the future. Planning time is already here; and, in any comprehensive scheme, live stock must have a prominent part.

The International Live Stock Exposition is dedicated to the task of promoting improvement in horses, cattle, hogs and sheep. It is a business problem, with the essential admixture of sentiment. Only by active co-operation can peace problems be solved; and at the 1918 assemblage of breeders, feeders and farmers in Chicago the first week of December, these problems will be considered by men whose personal interests force them to keep abreast of the times and coincidently operate to the advantage of the whole community.

Peace problems are squarely up to leaders in every sphere of production. After the war, business will lack every vestige of precedent The fact that the 1918 International occurs during the armistice that precedes return to peace conditions make it peculiarly opportune for the consideration of prospective conditions.

The brains of the live stock industry will gather in Chicago next month, giving the meeting unusual national importance in view of the responsibility of feeding devastated Europe, which is our national legacy of the strife of the past four four years.

Lutheran Social

The Lutheran Sunday school celebrated the completion of the trip to New York on Tuesday evening. The trip was a contest, in which class No. 3, taught by Mrs. A. K. Mumma, won. Four other classes completed the trip, as follows:

No. 1—Josephus Shilling, teacher.
No. 2.—Mrs. M. T. Bishop.
No. 4.—Joseph Haifley.
No. 9.—Mrs. Jacob Sechler.

There was a program and a social hour, including eats. The event was an enjoyable one.

Seen and Heard In Indiana

Indianapolis.—The state board of health decided to appeal to Governor Goodrich to enlist the civic forces of Indiana in the fight which the Hoosier health force is conducting against epidemic influenza-pneumonia. The governor is called on to ask mayors of Indiana cities to take official notice that a scourge is sweeping the state and organize local community commissions to act as clearing houses for the efforts of doctors, nurses and other persons in checking the ravages of the disease, which killed almost 3,500 persons in Indiana last month. In the first fight against the epidemic in October the board learned that its state-wide ban against public gatherings needed the strongest kind of support from local authorities and that it was a hard thing for the state board to try to manage local conditions in distant parts of the state at long distance. For these reasons and others the board asked the governor to ask the mayors to create commissions composed of local health officers, school authorities, business men's representatives and others. The commissions will carry out the central directions of the state authorities and such others as they deem necessary. Thirty-two counties the past week reported new cases to the board. The average was more than 35 cases to the county, the total being 1,120 new cases.

Indianapolis.—The Indiana Federation of Clubs nominated a ticket without a single contest for office and voted unanimously to instruct the secretary to cast the ballot for the officers instead of going through with the regular election by Australian ballot, as provided by the constitution. Mrs. John E. Moore of Kokomo was nominated as president to succeed herself. Mrs. J. C. Gibbs, Crown Point, first vice president; Mrs. W. A. Morris, Frankfort, second vice president; Mrs. A. W. Roach, Richmond, recording secretary; Mrs. Emogene Taft Lesh, Muncie, to succeed herself as corresponding secretary; Mrs. W. C. Smith, Indianapolis, treasurer; Mrs. Alice Foster McCulloch, Fort Wayne, to succeed herself as general federation secretary; Mrs. S. E. Perkins, Indianapolis, to succeed herself as a trustee.

Indianapolis.—Few business leaders in Indianapolis or Indiana have expressed any doubt that Indiana's business and professional life quickly will assimilate the thousands of Hoosier soldiers, when they come marching back to private life. But there are many who believe that, with a reasonable time for readjustment, these same Hoosier soldiers not only will find themselves generally better off than they were when they went away, but also the man who stayed at home likewise will be benefited by the broader outlook his soldier brother will bring to industry and the profession. Industrial and commercial plants already are announcing that they will take back all men who left their employ for the war.

Indianapolis.—The appellate court affirmed the Lake superior court in restraining Chicago sand companies from taking sand out of the bottom of Lake Michigan within the boundaries of Indiana. The court holds that there is a showing that the sand is worth three cents a yard at the bottom of the lake, and that the Chicago companies have been making profit out of taking it and selling it in Chicago without payment to the state.

Columbus.—The Bartholomew county corn show will be held January 8, 9 and 10. Premiums amounting to more than $500 will be offered in the various classes, there being special classes for contestants in the boys' corn clubs and in the men's five-acre tract competition. Prizes will be also offered in the professional class, this class heretofore having attracted exhibitors from all over the state as well as from neighboring states.

Laporte.—Orders from Washington abandoning the student army training camp at Interlaken, six miles east of Laporte, were received by Capt. S. A. Mulhauser, the commandant. As a result the 800 soldiers were dispersed. The older men were sent to larger camps and the younger men returned to their local boards to be mustered out.

Evansville.—Commission company of this city sold 50 head of Duroc Jersey hogs for Lee Kinsey of Henderson county, Kentucky, to Eastern packers at $17.50 a hundred. The hogs averaged more than 300 pounds each, and were all barrows. It was one of the highest marks ever made at the local live stock yards.

Indianapolis.—When the congestion of hogs at the Indianapolis stock yards continued and showed no indication of improvement, a second embargo was declared against further receipts of car shipments for an indefinite time. The ban did not apply to other live stock.

West Baden.—Wounded soldiers whose homes were in Indiana, Ohio, Illinois, Missouri and Michigan returned to this country for further treatment will be sent to the United States army hospital here, unless their injuries are of such a nature that special treatment which cannot be given at the local hospital is required. Announcement to that effect was made by officers of the medical corps now on duty here. Preparations are being made to accommodate 1,500 patients. The first of the wounded soldiers to be treated at the recently opened hospital have arirved here.

Gary.—Erection of a new plant in Gary, the cost of which will be $25,000,000, has been decided on by the National Tube company, which is a subsidiary of the United States Steel corporation. Plans for the establishment had been made previously to the entrance of the United States into the world war, but it was not known until recently that it had been determined to proceed with the project. It is the intention to build four blast furnaces and other departments. About 6,000 men are to be employed in the plant. Concrete docks and foundations for iron ore unloaders already had been constructed previously to the conflict with Germany. The headquarters of the tube company are at Pittsburgh. The American Car and Foundry company, which was ready to start construction of a new $10,000,000 plant here before the war, also is planning to carry out its program, it is understood. Construction probably will be begun early next year. The company already has acquired a site for the factory.

Evansville.—The war has curtailed hunting in Vanderburg county, according to local officials. William Wilson, circuit clerk, has issued 270 hunting licenses since the season was opened, while more than 400 were taken out last fall. The hunters are finding plenty of rabbits, but there are fewer quail and ducks than in former years. Rabbits will appear on the market soon, local dealers predict. The high price of shells has had some effect on reducing hunting, sporting goods dealers say, but they attribute the main decrease to the fact that so many of the young men are in military service. The year will have one good effect in allowing a general and natural increase in game, it is expected, and making game more plentiful next year.

Indianapolis.—The total vote cast in Indiana at the recent election was 79.6 per cent of the vote in 1916. The vote of all political parties was less than it was two years ago, partly because it was not a presidential election this year and because from 80,000 to 90,000 men of voting age were in the army and probably not more than 5,000 of them voted. But while the total vote this year was only 79.6 per cent of two years ago the Republican vote was 88.4 per cent of the Republican vote two years ago and the Democratic vote this year was only 75.8 per cent of the Democratic total two years ago.

Indianapolis.—The state board of accounts recovered $193,957.55 as the result of its examinations during the fiscal year ending September 30, according to a report submitted to the governor by G. H. Hendren, chief examiner for the board. Charges pending collection amount to $130,029.71 and Mr. Hendren believes that fully $100,000 of that amount will be recovered and returned to the proper county, city or township fund. He believes that the deterrent effort of the board's work saves Hoosier taxpayers $1,000,000 annually. The expense of the board for the year was $195,863.38.

Indianapolis.—The executive committee of Indiana State Teachers' association called off the sixty-fifth annual session of the association, which was to have been held in Indianapolis. The committee says the organization is to remain intact, with the same officers and committees until next year when the time comes for the 1919 session. This is the first time in 65 years that the association has missed an annual session, it was said, but owing to the influenza-pneumonia epidemic in the state it was thought unwise to call 25,000 or 30,000 teachers together from all parts of Indiana.

Lafayette.—Indiana ranks fifth in the amount of surplus wheat from this year's crop with 36,000,000 bushels above the amount needed to feed Hoosiers until the next harvest and enough to sow the 1919 crop, it is announced here by the agricultural extension department of Purdue university. The states ahead of it are North Dakota, South Dakota, Kansas and Minnesota, ranking in the order named. Only three other states produce a wheat surplus, Nebraska, Missouri and Montana.

Brazil.—Statistics compiled by Charles Culbertson, county food administrator, show that 196,095 pounds of sugar were purchased on permits issued at his office for canning purposes between May 15 and October 19. This is an average of 6½ pounds per capita. Canning permits for 13,000 pounds of sugar were issued on the last day.

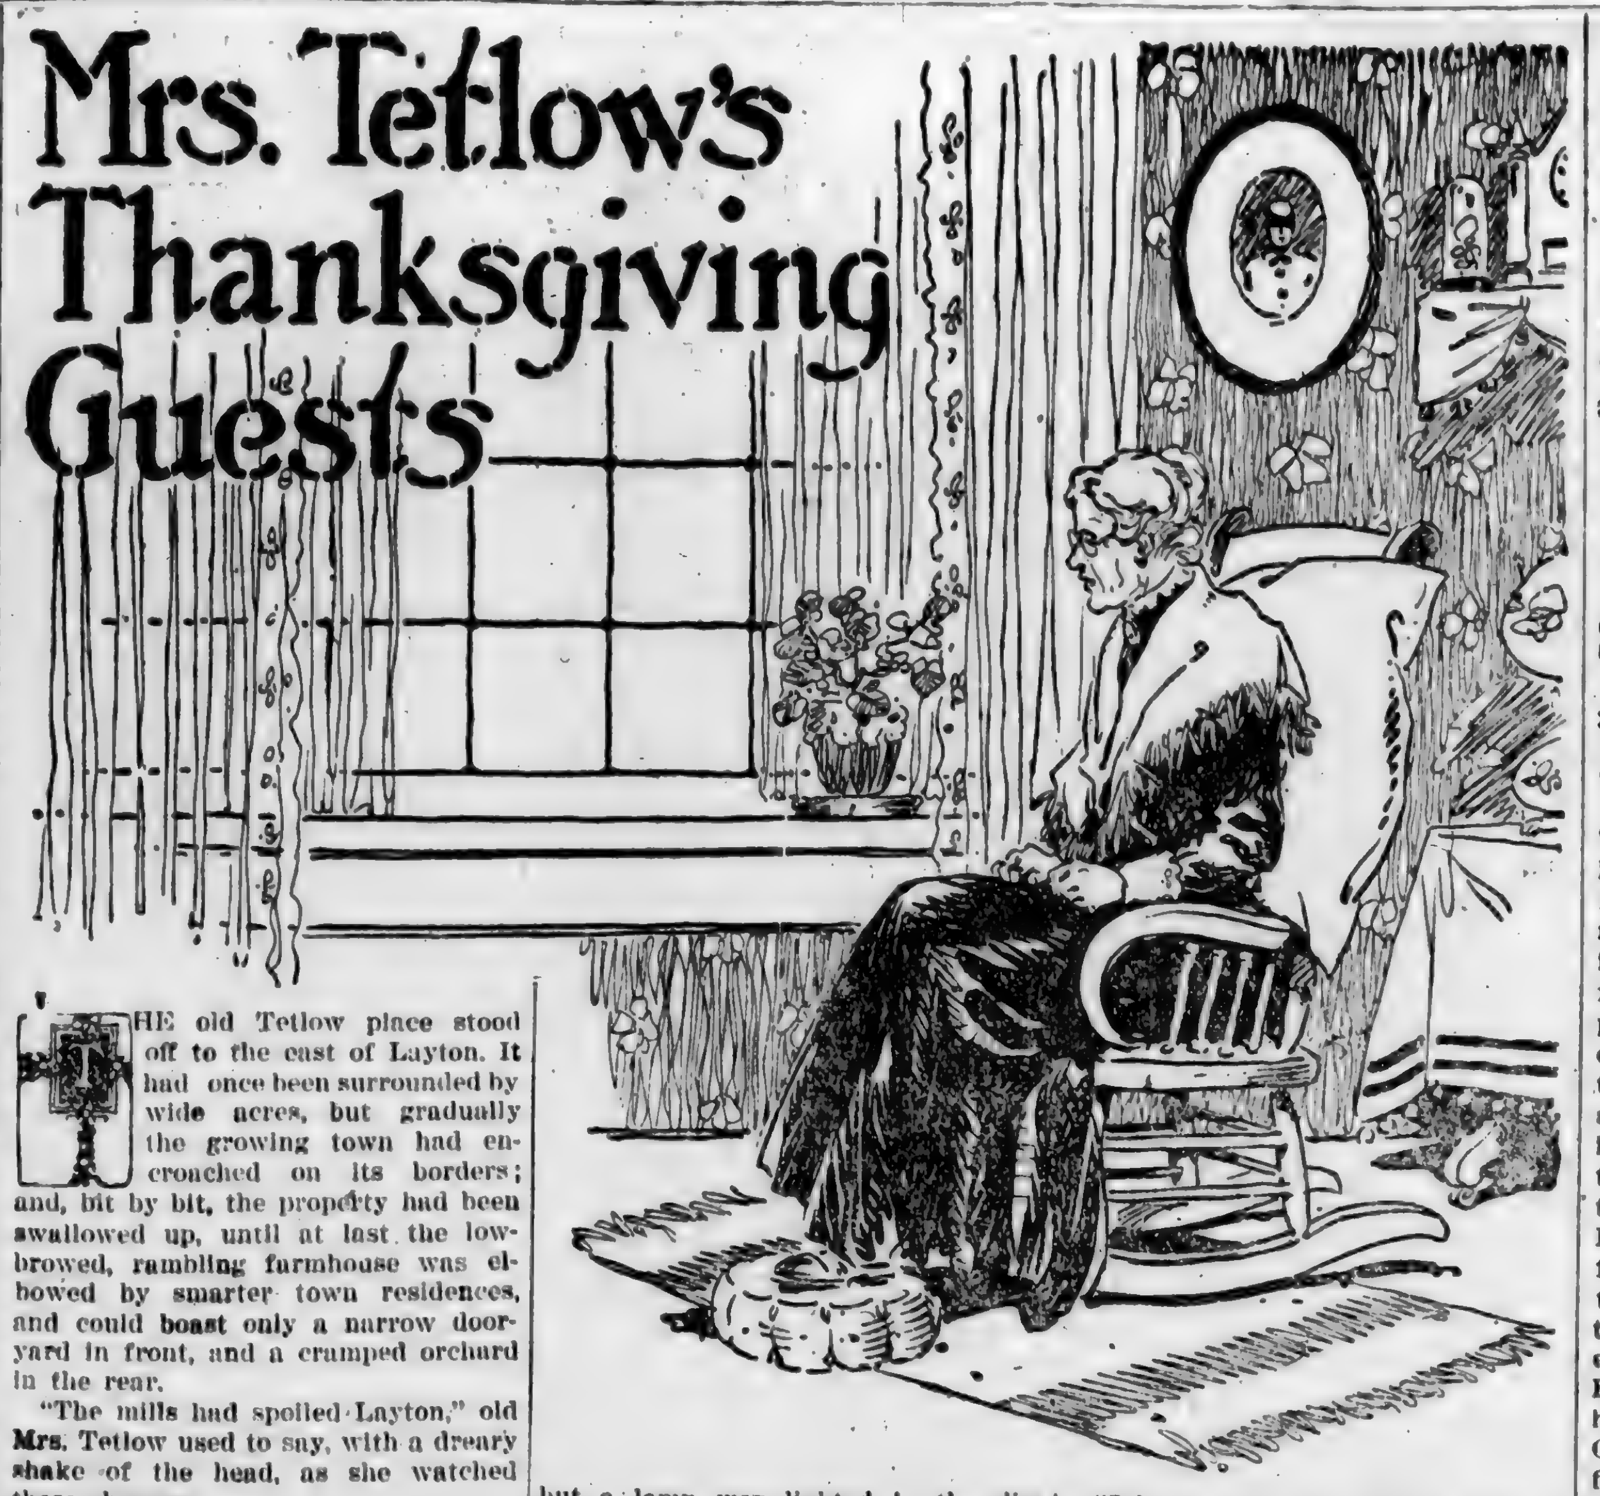
Lafayette.—An announcement was made by the authorities at Purdue university here that plans are being formulated, which may lead to many of the soldiers at Camp Purdue being furloughgd to Indiana farms to assist in corn husking and thus help relieve a shortage of agricultural labor.

Decatur.—Thirty macadam highways, it is expected, will be constructed in Adams county next year as the result of the lifting of some of the building restrictions put in force by the United States government during the war with Germany.

Evansville.—The ideal fall weather in this part of the state during the last few weeks has caused the new wheat to grow rapidly, and the crop was never as promising at this time of the year. The farmers now fear that the grain will advance so rapidly that it will be in danger during the winter weather.

Washington, D. C.—A statement issued by the director of purchase and storage of the quartermaster general's department shows that from July 26, 1918, to October 28, 1918, the government bought $9,518,387 worth of supplies in Indiana for the army.

Mrs. Tetlow's Thanksgiving Guests



THE old Tetlow place stood off to the east of Layton. It had once been surrounded by wide acres, but gradually the growing town had encroached on its borders; and, bit by bit, the property had been swallowed up, until at last the low-browed, rambling farmhouse was elbowed by smarter town residences, and could boast only a narrow dooryard in front, and a cramped orchard in the rear.

"The mills had spoiled Layton," old Mrs. Tetlow used to say, with a dreary shake of the head, as she watched these changes.

The Tetlow farm had been a prosperous one in its day, and its owners had lived on it in quiet respectability for many generations. But they were all scattered and gone now—these Tetlows—save for the one lonely old woman, who gazed out of the small-paned windows.

People said Mrs. Tetlow was growing forgetful. Perhaps she was—forgetful of the present.

It was a dreary November day. The clouds hung low and a few scattering snowflakes were beginning to fall.

"Real Thanksgiving weather," murmured Mrs. Tetlow, as she looked out of her front window.

"Yes, it's real Thanksgiving weather," repeated the old lady, drawing her small shoulder shawl closer about her. "It's time to be making the mincemeat."

"Mother always did that the first thing," she went on, by and by, "and today is Friday. Next week will bring the last Thursday in the month. The proclamation'll be read next Sabbath."

The knitting needles lay idle in Mrs. Tetlow's lap, as she rocked slowly back and forth.

"Grandma Spencer's folks always came by Wednesday night," she said, after a reflective pause, "and brother Peter and his wife and boys would get here as early as 9 Thanksgiving morning. The rest didn't come till nearly noon. I wonder where Peter's boy is now. I wish the West weren't so far off. I wonder if the boy's done well."

Mrs. Tetlow stopped rocking and sat up straight in her chair.

"Wouldn't I like to get ready for another such Thanksgiving party," she exclaimed, a red spot burning in either cheek. "I believe I will."

She arose, her slight figure trembling as she rolled up her knitting work and thrust the needles into it.

"Let me see," she went on musingly, how many must I provide for? There's Peter and Mary and the three boys, and Jane and Henrietta and Uncle Solon. Nannie and her husband and the little folks, bless 'em! and Grandma Spencer's folks and Joe and Letty. It'll be a long tableful, but I'll be ready for them."

Monday saw active preparations going on in the old kitchen.

The last thing each night before going to her bed the old lady took her wavering candle and inspected her pantry shelves, and with every evening there were more toothsome goodies to behold.

When the traveling butcher stopped Wednesday for his usual small order, Mrs. Tetlow followed him out to his cart and selected the largest turkey in his collection. The man's eyes opened wide.

"Expecting company, ma'am?" he asked as he weighed it, and the old woman nodded gravely.

That morning the windows in the upper chamber were thrown open to the wind and sunshine, and sweeping and dusting and airing of bed linen were in order.

"Grandma Spencer's folks always some by Wednesday night," she said, "and the rooms haven't been used for some time. They feel a little damp, so I'll have them open all day."

Toward night Mrs. Tetlow put on her second best gown and sat down near the window to watch.

When her guests arrived, the nearest neighbor might not have known, but a lamp was lighted in the dim best room that evening, and at nine o'clock the old woman took a bedroom candle in either hand and toiled up the creaking stair. On the little stand beside each bed she placed a brass candlestick, and, having turned back the sheets, went out again, murmuring a soft "good-night."

Mrs. Tetlow arose at dawn, and before it was time to prepare breakfast she had dressed her turkey and set it aside, ready for the oven.

About nine o'clock she began to lay her table.

Having smoothed out every wrinkle in the cloth, she gathered all her geranium blossoms and put them in the center of the table in a glass bowl. Then the silver, which had all been polished the day before, was brought forth from its canton flannel wrappings, and Great-grandma Tetlow's blue china was lifted down from the shelves of the china closet.

"How good it is to see all these things out again!" exclaimed the old lady, surveying the result of her labor with pardonable pride; "and it's right good to have company once more," she added with a little sigh; "I've eaten alone so long."

"I've nothing to do now," she said, "but to sit at the front window and watch for the folks to come. I'll be able to see them far up the meadow road."

A few minutes later she was startled by hearing a knock at the front door, and, quite trembling with the shock, she arose to open it.

"Good morning, Mrs. Tetlow." It was Mrs. Clifford, the young doctor's wife, who spoke. "Good morning, Mrs. Tetlow. Isn't this a beautiful Thanksgiving day? Madam Clifford is out in the carriage and she wants to take you home to have dinner with us. Please say you'll come; and let me get your bonnet and shawl for you."

Mrs. Tetlow looked down into the bright young face, with a dreamy happiness in her own, as she slowly shook her head.

"You're real good," she said, "and please tell Madam Clifford I'm just as much obliged to her, but I can't come today. I'm—I'm looking for company."

There was a ring of tremulous pride in the old voice that went to the heart of the young woman. She looked up into the wrinkled old face and noted the strange glow of content and far-off happiness in the old eyes. Mrs. Clifford remembered it afterward with a sense of awe.

As she turned to go now she saw, through the open door, a corner of the long table, all ready for dinner.

"I'm so glad for you, Mrs. Tetlow!" she exclaimed impulsively. "I hope you will have a pleasant Thanksgiving day." Then she hurried back to her carriage, and Mrs. Tetlow returned to her rocking-chair by the window.

"They're real late," she murmured to herself now and then, and a new, strange weariness and numbness crept over her as she sat and waited, her dim vision still wandering far up the meadow road.

Suddenly she started forward with outstretched arms, "Peter!" she cried. "Mary!" and then sank back feebly in her chair. "I'm right glad to see you all," she faltered, "but I seem to be a little tired. Just lay off your things and draw up near the fire. It is growing chilly." She drew her shawl closer about her, with a little shiver as she spoke.

"Johnny, just put another stick in the stove; that's a good boy." She closed her eyes a moment, murmuring softly to herself, "I mustn't give out now; its nearly dinner time. I'll jus' rest till the others come."

But soon she leaned forward again a joyous smile on her lips.

"Nannie!" she exclaimed, "and the blessed baby! I didn't see you come in. Sit here, child; I'll hold the little one while you rest," and she began to croon softly as she rocked. "It is cold," she murmured again, "real cold; but then it's Thanksgiving weather."

Several moments slipped by, while the old clock alone broke the stillness; then Mrs. Tetlow raised her head. "I smell lavender," she said. "Aunt Henrietta! I knew you had come. I smelled the lavender."

"Grandma Spencer's in the best room," she added. "She came at sun down last evening and she seems real smart. What, Joe, you here, too! Did you come in the back way? Uncle Solon and pa are in the barn, aren't they?"

An anxious look suddenly clouded the sunshine in her eyes. "Nannie," she whispered, "will you just take a look at things in the kitchen. I seem to be a little tired, but there's nothing to do. I'll come soon."

Her gaze wandered up the "meadow road" again, the joyous look returning. "They're coming!" she cried at length. "They're coming; I can see the sleigh." Then she turned, as though some one had touched her elbow, and started back wonderingly.

"My little Mary!" she faltered, with dimming eyes, "my little Mary, with her old rag baby! I thought—oh, father, John, here is our little Mary!"

With a beautiful gesture she clasped the child of her youth to her heart, and when she raised her eyes again it was to murmur, "Mother, father, Letty, Eben—what a grand Thanksgiving! I didn't count on seeing you all—why, the room is full—full—but I have enough—"

* * * * *

The sun had gone down when Dr Clifford drove by the old Tetlow place on his way to see some patient.

"So the old lady is entertaining," he said to himself, remembering his wife's story, and then, glancing at the house, he drew his horse up suddenly. "No lights!" he exclaimed, and an intuitive implse made him stop. "I can't seem to go by," he said, "I must just run in and see if all is well with the old lady."

He hurried up the path and lifted the heavy knocker, but no one answered. Then the doctor opened the door and walked in.

"Mrs. Tetlow," he called, but the loud tick of the clock alone responded. Finally a sleepy cat emerged from the kitchen and rubbed against his leg.

Dr. Clifford struck a match and lighted a lamp that stood on the hall table. Then he passed into the sittingroom. The fire in the air-tight stove had gone out and the room had grown cold. Through a half-open door he could see dimly a long table, laid for many guests, but no plate had been disturbed.

The doctor raised the lamp above his head and turned toward the front window. In the high-backed rocker a slender, motionless figure leaned back among the cushions, but the old house was wrapped in peaceful stillness; for, with a wonderful smile upon her white lips, Mrs. Tetlow had gone forth with her Thanksgiving guests.

FROWNED ON ALL LUXURIES

At Many Times in Different Periods an Effort Has Been Made to Enforce Simplicity.

Luxury taxation is by no means a new idea. In Rome, more than 2,000 years ago, the Oppian law enacted that "no woman should possess more than half an ounce of gold, or wear a dress of different colors, or ride in a carriage in the city or within a mile of it except on occasions of public religious ceremonies." In 187 B. C. a law was passed to limit the number of guests at entertainments.

A limit was set on the cost of funerals and of funeral monuments. And there would certainly be some outcry in this country against the methods of Julius Caesar, who had officers stationed in the market place to seize provisions forbidden by law, and sent soldiers to feasts to remove illegal eatables!

In our own country, the fourteenth century found extravagance in dress rampant, and during the reign of Edward III laws were made to restrain it. Food, also, has been regulated by old English laws. In the reign of Edward II a proclamation was issued against extravagant catering in the castles of "great men."—London Tit-Bits.

LESSON FOR DECEMBER 1

THE STORY OF JOSEPH.

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 37:18-28.

GOLDEN TEXT—Hatred stirreth up strifes, but love covereth up all transgressions.—Proverbs 10:12.

DEVOTIONAL READING—Psalms 4.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL—Genesis 37:1-17.

I. Joseph the Well-Beloved Son (37:1-4).

Joseph was Jacob's favorite son. This was due partly to the fact that he was the son of the wife of his first love and the son of his old age, but mainly because of the superior qualities which Joseph possessed. This favoritism expressed itself in a superior position and more respectable clothes. That Jacob should feel partial toward Joseph, perhaps, was unavoidable, but that he should manifest it was extremely unwise. Serious trouble will always result from partiality being shown toward children. His brethren's intense hatred burst forth upon him. This feeling was intensified by his pure life and by his testimony among them because of their evil deeds. Joseph is a type of Christ. He was living in fellowship with his father at Hebron (37:14); Christ was with the Father before coming into the world (John 16:28); Joseph was the beloved son (Genesis 37:3); Christ was the beloved Son of God (Matthew 3:17); Joseph was hated by his brethren (Genesis 37:4); Christ was hated by his brethren (John 15:24); Joseph was envied by his brethren (Genesis 37:11); Christ was delivered up through envy (Mark 15:10).

II. Joseph's Dreams (37:5-11).

1. His brothers' sheaves bowing in obeisance to his.

This was rightly interpreted by them to mean their humble obedience to him. This intensified their hatred.

2. The sun, moon and eleven stars rendering obeisance to him.

This dream is wider in its application. The eleven stars are identical with the eleven sheaves. The sun and moon, as rightly interpreted by his father, represented his father and mother as rendering obeisance to him.

III. Joseph Sent by His Father on a Mission of Mercy to His Brethren (vv. 12-17).

His brethren had gone to Shechem, about fifty miles distant from Hebron, where was abundance of pasture for their flocks. Jacob became anxious as to their welfare, and sent Joseph, a young man now seventeen years old, to find out their condition. Undeterred by the envious hatred of his brethren, he willingly responded, "Here I am." No doubt he realized that his mission was fraught with great dangers—the exposure to highway robbers, wild beasts, and the murderous hatred of his brethren. Notwithstanding this, he rendered willing obedience. Christ was sent by the Father on a mission of mercy to his brethren (1 John 4:14; John 1:11; Phil. 2:7, 8). Though he knew that the envious hatred of his brethren would result in his suffering and death on the cross, he went forth delighting to do his Father's will.

IV. Joseph's Reception by His Brethren (vv. 18-28).

1. Their murderous plot (vv. 18-22).

They said "Behold this dreamer cometh, let us slay him." This is what Christ's brethren said about him (Matt. 21: 38). They thought they would prevent these dreams coming true by destroying the dreamer. Reuben dissuaded them from this act by proposing to cast him into a pit, intending afterward to rescue him and restore him to his father.

2. They strip him of his coat of many colors and cast him into the pit (vv. 23, 24). In spite of his earnest entreaty against this act they perpetrated this heartless cruelty (Genesis 42:21).

3. Their feasting (v. 25).

Their heartless cruelty is manifest in that they could enjoy the festivities of a meal, perhaps, within the sight and hearing of Joseph's cries.

4. Sold him to the Ishmaelites (vv. 25-28).

Judah proposed that they sell him, as no gain could accrue from letting him die in the pit. One Judas, later, sold the Lord for money. Having done this infamous deed, they sought to cover it up by deceit and lying. They took his coat of many colors and dipped it in the blood of a kid and sent it to his father, allowing him to draw his own conclusions as to the matter. Jacob is now reaping what he had sown. Many years before this he had deceived his father by trickery and pious lying.

Others.

The late General Booth was asked upon one occasion to send a message to the various stations of the Salvation Army throughout the world, and to condense into one word. After some reflection he chose the word "Others!" There was a whole sermon in it—the call to sacrifice.

Carolyn of the Corners

BY RUTH BELMORE ENDICOTT

Copyright, [illegible], by Dodd, Mead & Company, Inc.

PRINCE BECOMES A HERO OF ANOTHER ADVENTURE WHICH INCREASES HIS POPULARITY.

Synopsis.—Her father and mother reported lost at sea when the Dunraven, on which they had sailed for Europe, was sunk, Carolyn May Cameron—Hanna's Car'lyn—is sent from New York to her bachelor uncle, Joseph Stagg, at the Corners. The reception given her by her uncle is not very enthusiastic. Carolyn is also chilled by the stern demeanor of Aunty Rose, Uncle Joe's housekeeper. Stagg is dismayed when he learns from a lawyer friend of his brother-in-law that Carolyn has been left practically penniless and consigned to his care as guardian. Carolyn learns of the estrangement between her uncle and his one-time sweetheart, Amanda Parlow, and the cause of the bitterness between the two families. Prince, the mongrel dog that Carolyn brought with her, and the boon companion of the lonesome girl, is in disfavor with Uncle Joe, who threatens to dispose of him, but Prince becomes a hero and wins the approval of the Corners by routing a tramp in the act of robbing the schoolteacher.

CHAPTER VII.

A Sunday Walk.

Really if Prince had been a vain dog his ego would certainly have become unduly developed because of this incident. The Corners, as a community, voted him an acquisition, whereas heretofore he had been looked upon as a good deal of a nuisance.

After she recovered from her fright Miss Minnie walked home with Carolyn May and allowed Prince's delighted little mistress to encourage the "hero" to "shake hands with teacher."

"Now, you see, he's acquainted with you, Miss Minnie," said Carolyn May. "He's an awful nice dog. You didn't know just how nice he was before."

Almost everybody went to church and all the children to Sunday school, which was held first.

The Rev. Afton Driggs, though serious-minded, was a loving man. He was fond of children and he and his childless wife gave much of their attention to the Sunday school. Mrs. Driggs taught Carolyn May's class of little girls. Mrs. Driggs did her very best, too, to get the children to stay to the preaching service, but Carolyn May had to confess that the pastor's discourses were usually hard to understand.

"And he is always reading about the 'Begats,'" she complained gently to Uncle Joe as they went home together on this particular Sunday, "and I can't keep interested when he does that. I s'pose the 'Begats' were very nice people, but I'm sure they weren't related to us—they've all got such funny names."

"Hum!" ejaculated Uncle Joe, smothering a desire to laugh. "Flow gently, sweet Afton, does select his passages of Scripture mostly from the 'valleys of dry bones,' I allow. You've got it about right there, Carolyn May."

"Uncle Joe," said the little girl, taking her courage in both hands, "will you do something for me?" Then, as he stared down at her from under his bushy brows, she added: "I don't mean that you aren't always doing something for me—letting me sleep here at your house and eat with you and all that. But something special."

"What is the 'something special?'" asked Mr. Stagg cautiously.

"Something I want you to do today. You always go off to your store after dinner and when you come home it's too dark."

"Too dark for what?"

"For us to take a walk," said the little girl very earnestly. "Oh, Uncle Joe, you don't know how dreadful I miss taking Sunday walks with my papa! Of course we took 'em in the morning, for he had to go to work on the paper in the afternoon, but we did just about go everywhere. If you would go with me," the little girl added wistfully, "just this afternoon, seems to me I wouldn't feel so—so empty."

"Humph!" said Uncle Joe, clearing his throat. "If it's going to do you any particular good, Car'lyn May, I suppose I can take a walk with you."

It was a crisp day—one of those autumn days when the tang of frost remains in the air, in spite of all the efforts of the sun to warm it.

Here and there they stopped to pick up the glossy brown chestnuts that had burst from their burrs. That is, Carolyn May and her uncle did. Prince, after a single attempt to nose one of the prickly burrs, left them strictly alone.

"You might just as well try to eat Aunty Rose's strawberry needle cushion, Princey," the little girl said wisely. "You'll have a sorer nose than Amos Bartlett had when he tried to file it down with a wood rasp."

"Hum!" ejaculated Mr. Stagg, "whatever possessed that Bartlett child to do such a fool trick?"

"Why, you know his nose is awfully big," said Carolyn May. "And his mother is always worried about it. She must have worried Amos, too, for one day last week he went over to Mr. Parlow's shop, borrowed a wood rasp and tried to file his nose down to a proper size. And now he has to go with his nose all greased and shiny till the new skin grows back on it."

"Bless me, what these kids will do!" muttered Mr. Stagg.

It was just at that moment that the little girl and the man, becoming really good comrades on this walk, met with an adventure. At least to Carolyn May it was a real adventure and one she was not to forget for a long, long time.

Prince suddenly bounded away, barking, down a pleasant glade, through the bottom of which flowed a brook. Carolyn May caught a glimpse of something brown moving down there and she called shrilly to the dog to come back.

"But that's somebody, Uncle Joe," Carolyn May said with assurance, as the dog slowly returned. "Prince never barks like that unless it's a person. And I saw something move."

"Somebody taking a walk, like us. Couldn't be a deer," said Mr. Stagg.

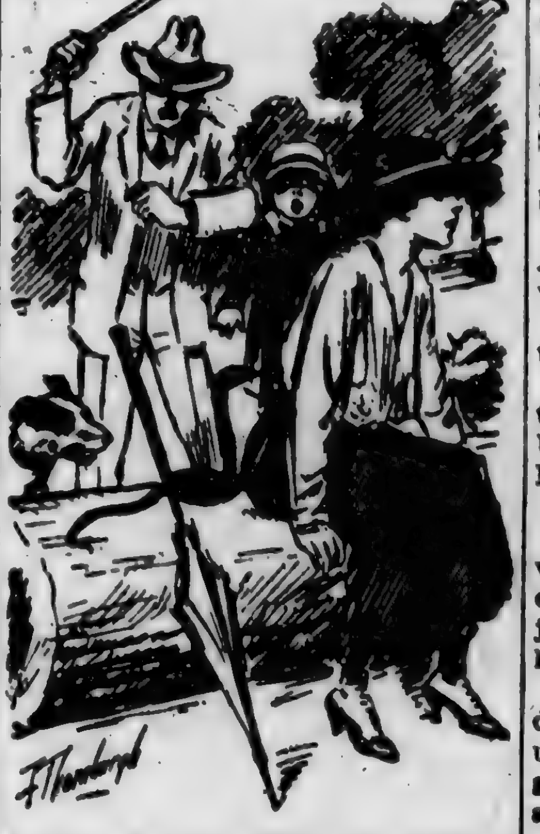
"Oh," cried Carolyn May later, "I see it again. That's a skirt I see. Why, it's a lady!"

Mr. Stagg suddenly grew very stern-looking, as well as silent. All the beauty of the day and of the glade they had entered seemed lost on him. He went on stubbornly, yet as though loath to proceed.

"Why," murmured Carolyn May, "it's Miss Amanda Parlow! That's who it is!"

The carpenter's daughter was sitting on a bare brown log by the brook. She was dressed very prettily, all in brown.

Carolyn May wanted awfully to speak to Miss Amanda. The brown lady with the pretty roses in her cheeks sat on a log by the brook, her face turned from the path Joseph Stagg and his little niece were coming along.



Leaped Forward With His Walking Stick to Strike.

And Uncle Joe was quite stubborn. He stared straight ahead down the path without letting the figure on the log get into the focus of his vision.

Hanging to Uncle Joe's hand but looking longingly at the silent figure on the log, Carolyn May was going down to the stepping stones by which they were to cross the brook, when suddenly Prince came to a halt right at the upper end of the log and his body stiffened.

"What is it, Prince?" whispered his little mistress. "Come here."

But the dog did not move. He even growled—not at Miss Amanda, of course, but at something on the log. And it was just then that Carolyn May wanted to scream—and she could not!

For there on the log, raising its flat, wicked head out of an aperture, was a snake, a horrid, silent, writhing creature, the look of which held the little girl horror-stricken and speechless.

Uncle Joe glanced down impatiently, to see what made her hold back so. The child's feet seemed glued to the earth. She could not take another step.

Writhing out of the hole in the log and coiling, as it did so, into an attitude to strike, the snake looked to be dangerous indeed. The fact that it was only a large blacksnake and nonpoisonous made no difference at that moment to the dog or to the little girl—nor to Joseph Stagg when he saw it.

It was coiled right at Miss Amanda's back. She did not see it, for she was quite as intent upon keeping her face turned from Mr. Stagg as he had been determined to ignore her presence.

Carolyn May was shaking and helpless. Not so Prince. He repeated his challenging growl and then sprang at the vibrating head. Miss Amanda uttered a stifled scream and jumped up from the log, whirling to see what was happening behind her.

Joseph Stagg dropped Carolyn May's hand and leaped forward with his walking stick raised to strike. But the mongrel dog was there first. He wisely caught the blacksnake behind the head, his strong, sharp teeth severing its vertebrae.

"Good dog!" shouted Mr. Stagg excitedly. "Fine dog!"

"Oh, Miss Amanda!" shrieked Carolyn May. "I—I thought he was going to sting you—I did!"

She ran to the startled woman and clung to her hand. Prince nosed the dead snake. Mr. Stagg looked exceedingly foolish. Miss Amanda recovered her color and her voice simultaneously.

"What a brave dog yours is, little girl," she said to Carolyn May. "And I do so despise snakes!" Then she looked directly at Mr. Stagg and bowed gravely. "I thank you," she said, but so coldly, so Carolyn May thought, that her voice might have come "just off an iceberg."

"Oh, I didn't do anything—really I didn't," stammered the man. "It was the dog."

Both looked very uncomfortable. Joseph Stagg began to pick up the scattered chestnuts from the overturned basket. The lady stooped and whispered to Carolyn May:

"Come to see me, my dear. I want to know you better."

Then she kissed Carolyn May and slipped quietly away from the brook, disappearing quickly in the undergrowth.

Joseph Stagg and the little girl went on across the stepping stones, while Prince splashed through the water. Carolyn May was thinking about Miss Amanda Parlow and she believed her Uncle Joe was, too.

"Uncle Joe," she said, "would that bad old snake have stung Miss Amanda?"

"Huh? No; I reckon not," admitted Mr. Stagg absent-mindedly. "Blacksnakes don't bite. A big one like that can squeeze some."

"But you were scared of it—like me and Prince. And for Miss Amanda," said Carolyn May very much in earnest.

"I guess 'most everybody is scared by the sight of a snake, Car'lyn May."

"But you were scared for Miss Amanda's sake—just the same as I was," repeated the little girl decidedly.

"Well?" he growled, looking away, troubled by her insistence.

"Then you don't hate her, do you?" the child pursued. "I'm glad of that, Uncle Joe, for I like her very much. I think she's a beautiful lady."

To this Uncle Joe said nothing.

"I guess," thought Carolyn May wisely, "that when two folks love each other and get angry the love's there just the same. Getting mad doesn't kill it; it only makes 'em feel worse.

"Poor Uncle Joe! Poor Miss Amanda! Maybe if they'd just try to look up and look for brighter things they'd get over being mad and be happy again."

When Uncle Joe and Carolyn May returned from this adventurous walk Mr. Stagg went heavily into his own room, closed the door and even locked it. He went over to the old-fashioned walnut bureau that stood against the wall between the two windows and stood before it for some moments in an attitude of deep reflection. Finally, he drew his bunch of keys from his pocket and opened one of the two small drawers in the heavy piece of furniture—the only locked drawer there was. He drew forth a tintype picture, faded now, but clear enough to show him the features of the two individuals printed on the sensitized plate.

His own eyes looked out of the photograph proudly. They were much younger eyes than they were now.

And the girl beside him in the picture! Sweet as a wild rose, Mandy Parlow's lovely, calm countenance promised all the beauty and dignity her matured womanhood had achieved.

"Mandy! Mandy!" he murmured over and over again. "Oh, Mandy! Why? Why?"

He held the tintype for a long, long time in his hand, gazing on it with eyes that saw the vanished years rather than the portraits themselves. Finally he hid the picture away again, closed and locked the drawer with a sigh and with slow steps left the room.

Carolyn learns from simple Chet Gormley some things about her financial affairs that cause her much worry. Read about it in the next installment.

The Pacifist as a War Worker

By MINNIE BOYER DAVIS
of The Vigilantes

Some were pacifists before the war. Some of these have changed while others—well, for instance, my friend—or rather my former friend, Miss B. She never did believe in war. When Belgium was invaded and the Hun ferociously bayoneted babies and violated little girls she still refused to believe in war. To some of us war seemed the most horribly apparent fact in the world, but still she did not believe in it. She was a pacifist; and a pacifist, as near as I can tell, seems to be one who has resolved to ignore war as long as the war does not hurt them. She had been for years, and is still, a state employee, and at times she has been a social worker, one of those well-meaning persons who believe that one part of society is qualified to reach down and lead by the hand certain more unlucky parts of society to show them the way they should go.

Up to the last minute of the last hour before the war vote was taken my former friend maintained that we had no cause for war and there was no possibility that we would ever be in the war. Just what went on in her mind when we took up our stern task of checking the advance of the Hun I cannot guess and she has never told. I wondered if she would stick to her principles and fight for them. I noticed that she bought bonds and subscribed to the Red Cross. She may have been one of those who would give to the Red Cross because in doing so she was not helping the war. Other pacifists have said as much, but even their "tainted" money will help.

At Red Cross Headquarters.

Later I learned that my former friend had gone to Washington, spending her vacation as a clerical helper in Red Cross headquarters. Then I believed that she had been regenerated and was no longer a pacifist. We had been pretty stiff about the time war was declared owing to our different views, but I now felt free to write and tell her to find a place for me to work also. Her reply amazed me. She wrote that Washington was too crowded a place to live and that she was quite tired of it. It really took hours to get anywhere. Living was too high to save any money. She had written all the expert stenographers who had applied to her for advice that they should keep their jobs in Nebraska. That, indeed, the most patriotic thing that Nebraskans could do was to stay in Nebraska even though the government was "just crying for stenographers." She was coming back to raise a garden and a pig and that was the best thing for all of us to do. And at this time the entire country was placarded with advertisements begging women who were competent to apply at once to the civil service commission and urging others to begin to study as the clerical force of the country was not sufficient to attend to war work.

Pacifist Needs Watching.

I thought of the 20,000 men already enlisted from Nebraska and of the many more who would go and I wrote to Miss B. and remonstrated with her for throwing a wrench in the machinery. I made investigations as to the cost of living and conditions and found nothing to deter workers who were willing to put up with some inconvenience for the sake of necessity. In reply I received such a torrent of abuse and accusation that caused me to understand that a pacifist will fight and fight in a mighty nasty way if crossed in anything. My pacifist acquaintance has now returned to her state job. Her war service consisted in keeping a number of very efficient workers away from Washington and they in turn no doubt kept others away. The epithet—"council of offense"—she applied to me, merely convinces me that a pacifist in war work needs watching or he may help the enemy instead of his own country.

FORGET-ME-NOTS

By G. E. WOODBERRY
of the Vigilantes.

The blue of the forget-me-nots
A humble beauty wears;
But the same light is in their leaves
That powders heaven with stars;
It minds me of blue legions
That packed the great advance.
The sparkle of the dancing eyes
In the blue of fighting France.

The violet of the ocean,
The gentian of the sky,
I've loved them all my life, and now
My life is passing by;
A prayer to thee, kind heaven!
A kiss to thee, bright wave!
But the blue of the forget-me-nots
Smiles from my hero's grave.

Getting Into the Service

By ROY MASON
of The Vigilantes

The doctor said no with all the finality with which our medical men examining candidates for the army can pronounce this word. The rejected candidate turned away, profoundly dejected, his mind in chaos because all his plans were upset. He was over draft age, but he had been so confident that he could pass. He was of no use in this war, he reflected bitterly. He might as well be a cripple or blind for all that he could do to help.

It had seemed so simple to pay all his debts, arrange his affairs, put his surplus into Liberty Bonds and the odd change into War Savings Stamps—and then enlist. And now they wouldn't have him. All on account of an infinitesimal heart murmur.

"There's no use sending one man to the front whom two will have to carry back," the doctor had said decidedly.

As he slouched down Michigan avenue in Chicago, drooping in mind and body, he noticed a button on the coat lapel of a six-foot stranger. It was not a Liberty Bond button, nor a Red Cross button. The stranger stopped to gaze out over Lake Michigan and he managed to read "War Camp Community Service" upon it. The stranger looked up, saw him reading, and gave him a quick appraising glance.

A Ray of Sunshine.

"Know about it?" he asked.

"No," the dejected man answered half heartedly. "What is it?"

"Great stuff," his new acquaintance informed. "Little old war job the Recreation Association of America took on when the soldiers and sailors began springing up over night like mushrooms. It's tied up with the War Department Commission for Training Camp Activities—"

The man who had been turned down by the doctor pricked up his ears.

"What do you do?" he wanted to know.

The six-footer grinned.

"Kind of a long story," he began, "but we get after every community anywheres near the training camps and forts and naval stations, and—well, see that the boys get some sensible entertainment—get folks interested in them as individuals, you know, so that they get a chance to eat a meal in a house with a regular family around them. We get up dances, too, with mothers, just like the ones they've left, for chaperons. Then we fix up clubs, and lists of cheap lodgings which are all right. There's a lot to do, you can bet your bottom dollar on that."

Need Men Like Him.

The man who had been refused a chance in the army grabbed him by the sleeve.

"Say," he broke out. "Do you need anybody to push things along. I'd like to get in on a thing like that."

The reply came quickly.

"We do need men who can form local committees—to furnish impetus—"

Before he could go on the other interrupted:

"Who can I take it up with?" he asked.

The tall man gave him a card.

"Write to National Headquarters, 1 Madison avenue, New York," he instructed, "or if you have the time and money go on there."

A week later the rejected candidate for military service started out from War Camp Community Headquarters with a traveling bag in his hand. His head was high and his eyes bright. They wanted men with records as good as his, and he had been put to work.

ON TO BERLIN!

By HENRI CHAPELLE
of the Vigilantes.

Our boys "over there" write home as though they really expected to march on Berlin some day. Is this merely a delusion encouraged in them to keep them in heart for fighting? Perish the thought! Their slangy "can the kaiser" expresses an intention as serious as that of the Crusaders and we ought not to dream of thwarting them by diplomatic action.

Any talk of peace, by the way, recalls the fact that such treaties must be based on confidence in the word of the parties involved, and that our government has expressed a certain disapproval of trying to deal with a political coterie that sees in treaties only "a scrap of paper." If it now met these same officials at a conference table, entering into any compact with them would at once acknowledge their honorable and legitimate standing as governmental representatives. How, after that, could this government encourage the people of Germany to displace them as unworthy and to establish more democratic government? Impossible!

The only place where we can help democracy in Germany is the field of battle. We can there capture or kill the guilty individuals or by straight conquest of territory drive them to an unconditional surrender. We could then hold them prisoners while we called for newly elected representatives of the German people to treat with us for a lasting peace. Our boys are simple and courageous enough to expect to do just that. They are gallant fighters enough to do it, if we back them by saying, "On to Berlin!"

A CERTAINTY

By THOMAS ADDISON
of the Vigilantes.

Courage, O faltering soul of mine!
Athwart the worn-torn, grisly night,
Writ by a hand divine,
A message see in words of light—
Naught shall avail against the Right.

The legions of the insatiate foe
Shall strive in vain to win the height
Where starry banners flow;
Shall fail, those tyrant hordes of Might—
Naught shall avail against the Right.

God's justice reigns, illimitable, strong
Above a world in bloody plight.
An end will come to wrong!
For, sure as day succeeds the night,
Naught shall avail against the Right.

Temperance Notes

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

THAT ADDITIONAL FIVE WEEKS.

When one stops to consider that this nation has been spending two and a half billions dollars a year for drink, it is conceded that the government was bound by all the rules of the game to give us war-time prohibition. Mark R. Shaw, statistician of Boston, puts it thus:

During the last Liberty loan drive I picked up a circular entitled, "Turn the Key on Kaiserism—Invest in Liberty Bonds," telling what Liberty bonds of various sizes would purchase for the boys "over there." Using these figures it is interesting to see what we could do with the money that we pass over the bar for booze every day while the boys are in France.

Our drink bill for one day would pay for any one of the following items, and for one week it would buy all of them! Did you think of this during W. S. S. week?

1. Buy a $5 pair of shoes for each of 1,300,000 men.
2. Purchase gas masks for 253,000 men, at $27 each.
3. Clothe and feed 22,830 soldiers in France for an entire year, at $390 each.
4. Furnish 6,850 motor rolling kitchens, at $1,000 each.
5. Buy 4,566 motor ambulances at $1,500 each.
6. Construct 137 base hospitals with 500 beds each, at a cost of $50,000 per hospital.
7. Fully equip 2,055 hospital wards with 50 beds each, with beds made up and linen in reserve, chairs, tables, mirrors, foot tubs, 120 pairs of pajamas, bath robes and towels, at $3,350 per ward."

Think of the things we might have bought for the boys if the country were going dry January 1, 1919, instead of July 1.

OWN THEIR CARS

"Toilers in other cities may be purchasing autos for pleasure and for the benefit of their families," says the Seattle Star, "but in Seattle the owners of the big pay envelopes have developed the auto spirit to such an extent that it is an integral part of their working day.

"They don their working clothes in the morning, run out the car, and away to work. The ride is fresher than in crowded street cars, and gives a fellow a better appetite for his work.

"Many wives of workingmen drive their husbands to their employment, and then go shopping in the machine or return home.

"Groups of single fellows living in apartment or boarding houses club together and purchase autos which are used for the to-and-from-work trips and for pleasure in the evening.

"In the industrial district, where workmen's cars are parked, a row of garages, service stations and tire shops have sprung up to handle the new condition.

"'We want our men to own autos,' says D. E. Skinner, head of the Skinner & Eddy plants, 'it testifies to their thrift and brings them to work in a better and clearer frame of mind.'"

A TIMELY DECALOGUE.

I have been studying the commands that have been issued to the civilian army by the various departments of the United States government, and I can pretty nearly make an excellent decalogue. It would read something like this: Conserve food; conserve fuel; conserve railroad and steamship tonnage; conserve labor; conserve health; conserve efficiency; conserve the children; conserve money.

And the Women's Christian Temperance Union, to complete the decalogue, would like to add these two commands: Make America safe for the nation's defenders, the brave boys who will return when the war is over "over there." And second, help America lead the world in the war against Germany's strongest ally, the liquor traffic.—Anna A. Gordon.

THE MOST DANGEROUS OF ALL CHEMICALS.

If a flagon of alcohol were offered to a student of pharmacology to test as a curiosity, and he applied the standard methods of physiological experiment to it, he could but come to the conclusion that he was dealing with a more dangerous chemical than any now available in the whole range of materia medica, not second to opium or its derivatives as a destroyer of character, a disturber of function and a degenerator of tissue, and he would be quite justified in advising the prohibition of its manufacture and use as a beverage.—Dr. Haven Emerson, Health Commissioner, New York City, in Boston Medical and Surgical Journal.

ENGLISH WOMEN DEMAND PROHIBITION.

Recently the women of London joined in a mammoth parade on behalf of wartime prohibition of alcoholic liquors. The procession was headed by Lady Cecelia Roberts, daughter of the Countess of Carlisle, president of the World's W. C. T. U. Led by the martial music of a brass band, the women passed through Trafalgar square, where a resolution in favor of prohibition during the war was displayed, with a sign asking all in favor to raise the right hand.

To Relieve Armenians

A great relief work has been started by the International Sunday School association for the relief of Armenia, and the purpose is to raise $2,000,000 for this work. To this end, every Sunday school in DeKalb county will take up a special collection at an early date; and every other school in the United States will do the same. Henry M. Fretz, of Auburn, has charge of the work in this county.

The Armenians are a Christian people who are under the dominion of the Turks, and they have for years been cruelly oppressed by their Mohammedan masters. Particularly is this true during the late war, when the civilized world has been shocked by the Tutkish atrocties in Armenia. The Armenians will soon be given their liberty, and Christian America must help them until they become self supporting.

Want to Tell Others

Mrs. Susan Taylor, of Paulding, Ohio, says: "About two years ago, I suffered a general breakdown. I was nervous, my heart fluttered and I could scarcely drag around. I was simply miserable. I got no relief until I used Glando Tonic. The first treatment helped me. I continued the treatment until I am well. I gladly recommend Glando Tonic to others who suffer as I did.

Glando Is Her Doctor Now

Mrs. A. E. Roebuck, of Latty, Ohio, a lady 71 years old, says: "I had for several years suffered from liver, kidney and heart trouble. I had soreness, swelling and pain in my right side. I was constipated and bothered, with short breath and a full or bloated feeling after eating. At times, my heart palpitated and, other times, it was weak and I would feel faint. I often awoke frightened or in a startled condition. Since I have used Glando Tonic, I am so well that I have decided to let Glando be my doctor in the future."

These ladies, like many others, were filled with poisonous matter caused from a sluggish condition of the liver and other glands. As soon as the poison was removed, their bodies took on new life and health was restored.

Most aged people are troubled with sluggish glandular system; and unless they use something occasionally to relieve this condition, they are miserable. These people find Glando Tonic to be just what they need. If your druggist hasn't it, insist on his getting it for you; or send directly to the Glan-Aid Co., Fort Wayne, Ind. Large $1.00 size only.

"Black Coffee For Two"

A Thanksgiving Tale

by Mary Graham Bonner

"THOSE letters can wait until Friday, Miss Johnson. Tomorrow we're closed, you know."

"Very well, sir," said Miss Johnson.

"You don't seem to be especially pleased," continued Mr. Brown. "Most of the girls welcome a holiday. They can sleep and then go out dancing with some fine young man. Ain't you got a young man, Miss Johnson? Perhaps you've not been long enough in the city. Well, well, take your time. There's a lot of these youngsters who can make love all right, all right, but when it comes to furnishing the home—they'd have a hard time doing it on the installment plan. The salaries of young men ain't so big these days."

Mr. Brown was manager of the Jones & Cushing Wholesale Glass and Crockery company. He was a large gentleman with watery blue eyes, fat lips and pudgy hands.

"I suppose you'll be missing the old folks, eh?" continued the gentleman.

"I guess I will miss them," said Miss Johnson, with letters and notebook in hand. "It will be the first Thanksgiving I've been away. You see I took my course at business college last winter and went home for the summer."

"To be sure," said Mr. Brown. "It's only two months since you came here, but you've won your way into our hearts," he added with a leer.

"And I know how you feel," he went on. "Just longing for the old folks and the kids. How'd you like some real turkey, eh? Well, we'll have it. You're only a child to me. I'm old enough to be your father."

And with a look such as no father has ever given before or since, Mr Brown moved his chair a little nearer. "How about a Thanksgiving dinner with me tomorrow night? My wife has gone to see her old mother, who is down sick. So let's keep each other company, eh? And have real turkey. What do you say?

"We'll go to one of the swell places where there'll be cranberry sauce, too. And we'll hear music when we eat, that is if we get those noiseless soup spoons." Mr. Brown thought he was a humorous man.

"I guess I'll go," said Miss Johnson slowly.

"Good! I'll call for you at six sharp and you have a good sleep and write home to the folks that you're going out with a nice safe old fatherly man from the office." Mr. Brown really flattered himself that he was neither old nor safe.

Miss Johnson had closed the door and gone to put her book and letters back in her desk. Mr. Courtney, one of the salesmen and Mr. Brown's right-hand man, had noticed a slight flush on her face as she had passed him. He wondered if it could be possible that Mr. Brown had invited her to spend the holiday with him. But the idea vanished and just at that moment he was called to the telephone. The other girls had gone to the cloakroom and Miss Johnson entered as they were preparing for the outside world.

"What are you going to do tomorrow, Johnny?" asked Miss Marks. It was the name the girls had given her.

"I don't know just yet," she answered.

"Bill and I are going to a Thanksgiving ball," remarked Miss Angela Carter. "And I've got a swell new dress mother's making me."

There was a general discussion as to the ways the holiday would be spent and at the downstairs door Miss Johnson separated from her companions and went over to the elevated.

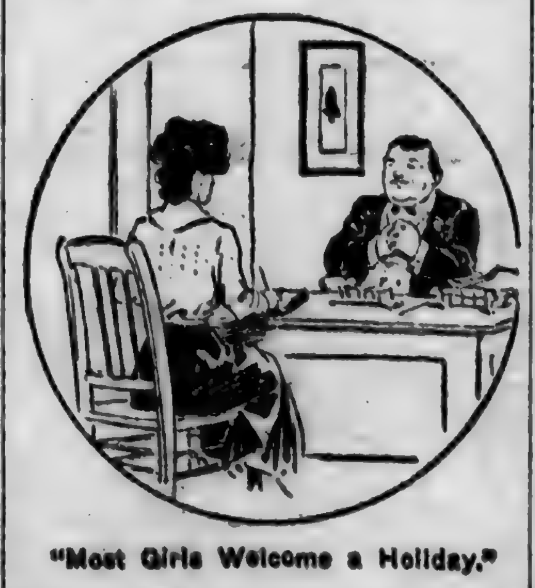
* * * * * *

"Courtney," called Mr. Brown.

"Yes, sir," he answered.

"Did that new shipment come in today?"

"No sir," said Mr. Courtney. "I don't believe we'll get it in until Monday now."



"Most Girls Welcome a Holiday."

"Oh, all right, I just wondered. Say young man, don't look so glum. Get a pretty girl and go off for the day tomorrow. You need cheering up. It's what I need, too. And I'll have it, believe me. I've got a little peach for dinner. Quite a sport for an old boy, eh?"

"Quite," said Mr. Courtney, quietly. "I don't care much for girls, that is, most girls."

"Hum," grunted Mr. Brown as the younger man left his office. "Falling in love, eh? She'll soon tire of him, whoever she may be, if he doesn't get a smile on his face once in a while."

"Has Miss Johnson left?" Mr. Courtney was asking of one of the stenographers who was hurrying off.

"Yes, left five minutes ago," was the answer.

"You haven't got her home address?" he asked.

"No, but I guess Mr. Brown has it. He keeps the addresses of the whole staff, you know." And she was gone.

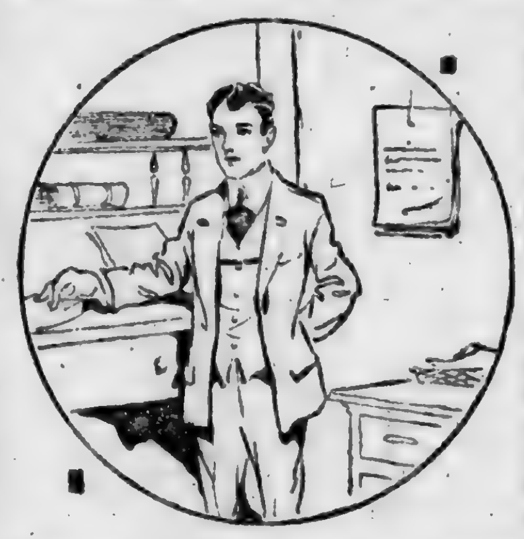
Miss Johnson boarded with friends her mother had met during her one city trip—a week's excursion which had taken in the Hippodrome and the Flatiron building as wonders never to be forgotten. Usually she took her dinner downtown at a cheap table d'hote, for Mrs. Palmer, her mother's friend, did not care much for cooking—and besides it had been arranged that way—room and breakfast, five dollars a week. But tonight she would go straight home without dinner. Perhaps they would be making preparations for the great day. She bought an evening paper, two bananas and a sweetened roll and started up the elevated stairs.

She reached home and opened the door with her latchkey. From every indication every one was out. She called for Mrs. Palmer but no reply came.

Miss Johnson ate her meager repast and then went to the kitchen for a drink of water. Her meal had been dry and somehow it choked her a little. Everything was so hard to swallow. Or was it that the lump in her throat got in the way?

At last ten o'clock came and Mrs. Palmer walked in. "Oh," said Miss Johnson, "I came home early tonight to know if I could help you with the dinner tomorrow. I'm going out myself. But mother has always said I was handy with the dressing."

"Dressing? Dinner?" repeated Mrs. Palmer in amazement. "Oh, land, child, I don't go to no fuss for Thanksgiving! What's the use? I just says to Bert Palmer and the kids, 'Now why should I be standing over a hot stove for hours when in no time you'd have all the stuff et up?' So I let's 'em sleep and then I runs down to the delicatessen and gets a few cold cuts and a bit of potato salad for a little extry. Say, why don't you go to the pictures more? I've been tonight to see 'The Wayward Girl's Return Home.' It was sad but oh, so beautiful."



Wondered If Mr. Brown Had Invited Her to Spend the Holiday With Him.

But Miss Johnson was not thinking of the pictures. A few cold cuts and potato salad for Thanksgiving, she was thinking, and a football game and the theaters and movies. No family gathering, no turkey, no pumpkin pie and cider. No children to be allowed on that day to eat all they wanted. Maybe it was a day of national gorging, but it was a family day anyway and it was Thanksgiving day.

She tried to sleep. She didn't want to think of the morrow. But she did, and at the same time came the vision of Mr. Brown, his watery eyes leering at her, and his pudgy hands holding hers so she couldn't escape, and his lips—those fat lips—forcing—Oh no! She shivered and pulled the clothes around her tighter. Why had she said she would go? Perhaps he meant to be kind. But he had always been a little too kind, a little too considerate, it seemed now.

Sometimes she had noticed a strange look on the part of Mr. Courtney, especially that afternoon. . . . She felt Ned Courtney thought Mr. Brown dictated less and talked more than was necessary. And it bothered her. But she was not sure, and she didn't want to lose her job. It had been so hard—beginning with everything so new and different. Of all the men she had met in New York she cared mostly for Ned Courtney and his opinion. He had seemed sincere and every one in the office spoke so highly of him. She wondered what he'd think of this, and then she wondered why she wished she knew.

So she thought on. Morning came. Her eyes were heavy. Sleep had come only in snatches. She dressed hastily and then laughed at herself for hurrying. She wrote home and tried to make her letter cheerful.

"Lydia! Lydia Johnson!" came Mrs. Palmer's voice from downstairs. "A gentleman to speak to you on the phone."

Miss Johnson went down the stairs without hurrying. She had never acquired the habit of running to the telephone as if it were on fire and must be put out by lifting the receiver.

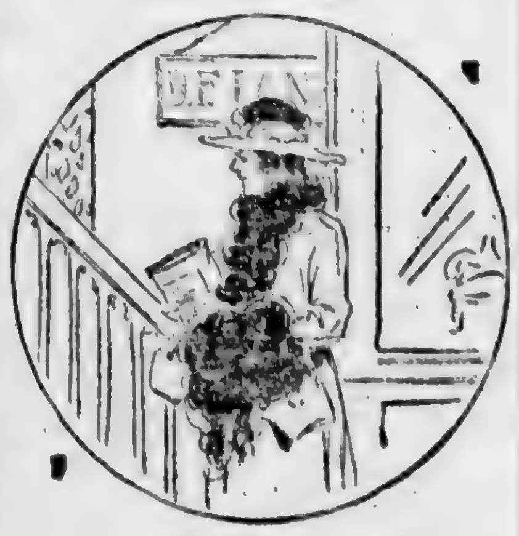
"Hello," she said.

"Oh, good-morning, Miss Johnson," came the voice from the other end, "I hope I didn't get you up out of bed. No? You're not a late sleeper even on a holiday? Well, I always knew you were smart. Just thought I'd call you up to tell you we'll have that turkey tonight at six you know. I'll be around in plenty of time. Look your sweetest!"

"Oh, thank you, Mr. Brown. Yes, I'll be ready a little before six."

At either end the receiver was hung up and each went off discontented.

"I wonder if I'm wasting time and money on her," meditated Mr. Brown. "It's all right to favor that country idea she has of a holiday but I like a little appreciation in return. . . . But I guess I've got her where I want her. . . . . Only I'd better not lose out by rushing things. She's a bit different from the usual run of 'em."



Started Up the Stairs.

Lydia returned to her room, passing by the inquisitive eyes of Mrs. Palmer without answer.

Later she breakfasted, or rather lunched, with the Palmer family. She played the piano a little, and then, before returning to her room, decided she would satisfy Mrs. Palmer's curiosity.

"I'm going to dinner with Mr. Brown of the firm," she said. "He's a father of children—not young and worthless." She laughed a little.

"That's good," said Mrs. Palmer. "But what's he doing taking you out today? Where's his kids?"

"Away to see a sick grandmother," said Lydia, and as she said it she felt that Mrs. Palmer nodded her head a little too understandingly. Lydia flushed slightly.

"Now, listen, dearie," said Mrs. Palmer, "to a word of motherly advice. Get all that's comin' to you. They think more of you when you make 'em spend—and if he's old enough to be a father—and take you out—he's likely got enough of the wherewithal. Say you like white furs. Tell him in a real baby tone you did wish you could have a silver mesh bag. While I promised your mother I'd look after you, the city's ways aren't the country's ways—leastwise, not so I'd know it. And I want to see you get on." She was thinking secretly of a new rug she might like herself. "Just work the old boy for all he's worth, but take my advice, and never fall in love. They're done with you then, and you lose interest in others."

Lydia had sat partly listening and partly dreaming of the Thanksgiving at home—the long table, her father's jokes, the children's ceaseless chatter, her mother hot and tired but beaming. She arose. "I'll be careful," she said as she bit her lip. "I won't fall in love. Don't worry, Mrs. Palmer, I'm not so young as you might think."

She went to her room and closed her door with a bang. Then softly opened it. An hour went by and then another. Still another passed and Lydia was growing impatient. Her hat and gloves and coat were ready. She sat there, nervous and shaking. At last she heard Mrs. Palmer's shrill voice:

"Lydia, Lydia."

Lydia closed the door softly and then opened it noisily. "Yes," she called back.

"I'm just going over to see the pictures for an hour. I'll be back in time to fuss you up a bit for tonight. Don't worry. I'll only be gone an hour."

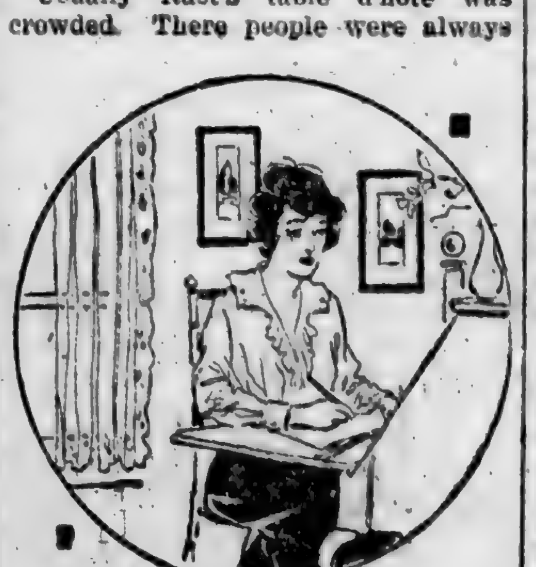
"All right, thank you, Mrs. Palmer," she called.

She waited five minutes, then ten and at last put on her things. Quietly she stole down the stairs. She opened the door, looked up and down the street and then hurriedly walked along.

"I guess," she said slowly to herself, "I'll go downtown." And she went up the stairs to the elevated.

"I suppose I'll have to eat," she thought grimly.

Usually Rast's table d'hote was crowded. There people were always standing waiting for seats, looking annoyed and envious of those who were almost finished but who took so long over their coffee. Table d'hote diners had no right to take so long over their coffee, their expressions read quite plainly. But Mr. Rast was genial and always held his crowds by a suave smile and a confidential manner of saying to each customer, "I'll have a table in just a moment for you."



Tried Hard to Make Her Letters Appear Cheerful.

But this evening there were few at Rast's. The whole place looked strangely empty.

"Plenty of tables tonight," said Miss Johnson.

"Yes, miss," Mr. Rast smilingly admitted. "But if some folks knew what an extra menu I give for Thanksgiving they would not be eating home. Trouble isn't that, altogether, but here in the business section there ain't much going on today. Have your choice of tables." And with a flourish Mr. Rast still retained his manner of personal interest and of a great desire to please.

Lydia Johnson took her seat and looked at the menu. It was just about the same as usual, but Mr. Rast had been true to his boast. There on the top was an additional sheet of thin paper, reading in watery ink, "Special for Today." Below was "Thanksgiving turkey and cranberry sauce. Squash pie, apple cider."

Lydia ordered them, scarcely noticing that they were a little special in price, too.

Olives and celery were put in front of her and a small dish of relish. She tasted some and as she put down her fork she saw Ned Courtney entering. As he caught sight of her his eyes brightened and his step became more buoyant. "May I sit here?" he asked, pointing to the vacant chair opposite her.

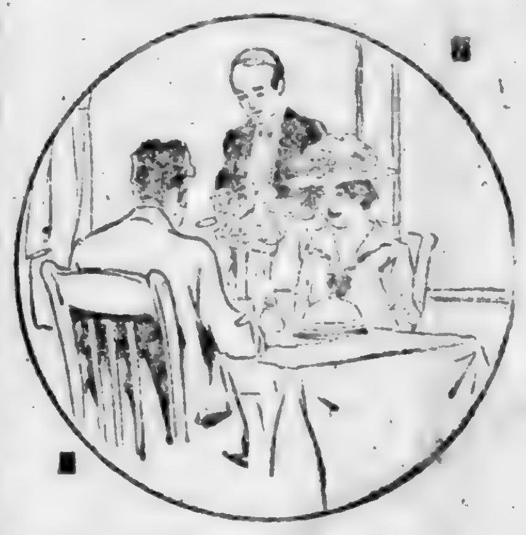
"Yes, do," said Lydia quickly. "I'm all alone. I'm kind of homesick anyway," she admitted as her eyes shone a little mistily. "They make a regular fuss over Thanksgiving day at home. I'm from the country, you know. And I guess I'm still a bit of a youngster. It's my first Thanksgiving away from home."

"And you're here, you poor child," said Mr. Courtney, who was possibly two years her senior. "Of all the God-forsaken places in the world, the city takes the lead on a holiday when you've no special pals—and when you've been used to the other kind. It's my first Thanksgiving day here."

"Mother makes an awful fuss over the day," said Lydia. "And pop is just as bad. Always jokes we're not going to have turkey and we always do, of course."

"Of course," agreed Mr. Courtney, "and pumpkin pie and cider. I see you've ordered the specials. Well, I guess I will too. Squash pie, eh? I suppose they haven't any pumpkin."

They ate their dinner and each talked of the times at home—other Thanksgivings.



"I See You've Ordered the Specials."

"Do you come here often?" asked Mr. Courtney.

"Almost always," she answered. "I wasn't going to come tonight, and then I thought I would. I've never seen you here before."

"No, it's my first appearance, though I guess I know all the other places like this. One of the boys told me about it at the office. Where did you think you'd go? I mean tonight, if you hadn't come here?"

"Mr. Brown asked me to have dinner with him. He said his wife and two kids were up with his mother-in-law, who's sick. She lives in the country and so he'd be all alone. I guess he meant it kindly, but somehow I just felt kind o' queer about going."

"Thank God you did," said Mr. Courtney with a sudden burst of religious fervor. "Wife and two kids and a mother-in-law—all to fool you with! Why he's not even married! I pity the poor creature who would ever marry him. He's asked all the girls in the office to go out with him. He threatens to fire 'em if they don't accept, but if they're any good at their work he figures on business first—and besides it would look queer to the partners.

"I've seen him eyeing you," he continued. "And I've said to myself often, 'If he lays a hand on her I'll—' Tried to work on your homesickness! Ugh!"

Miss Johnson had turned crimson. "I've always been home Thanksgiving before," she murmured again. She had talked a good deal to Ned Courtney in the shop and the girls had teased her about him. But he had never "asked her out." She felt miserably friendless.

"Listen," she heard him say, "I've cared for you ever since you first stepped into Jones & Cushing's, and I'd like to see you step out. My father's ready any day to hand over the farm to me, and the farm life is the real life. Will you—will you—in a little while, marry me? Mr. Brown can fire us both. We'll never be at his mercy again on Thanksgiving day. We'll have a country Thanksgiving and we'll let the kids eat all they want—that is—later on." He grew uncomfortably red. He had been rushing a little too fast.

Lydia looked at him first a full moment, then looked away.

"I've always wished you cared for me," she said softly to the empty table opposite.

"That's enough," said Mr. Courtney, "we'll make up for this, beginning with Christmas."

"Anything else?" murmured the waiter for the third time.

"Oh," said Mr. Courtney, "black coffee for two!"

Expose a Slacker

This is the way the national united war work committee of Hicksville flayed a slacker:

"Mr. O. E. Lybarger has failed to contribute, in our opinion, in proportion to his financial ability to the united war work fund. No one can conceive now any person could decline to do his share for so wonderful a cause. Our boys have gone forth and fought our battles, giving up everything near and dear to them that we might live and escape the terrible torture and destruction inflicted on Belgium and France. The nation asked for a small contribution from each individual that our soldier boys might receive, through the agency of some of these organizations, some of the comforts and moral protection of home; and one man comes forth with excuses for hot contributing his proportionate share.

"It is extremely regretted that this community should have one lone man who stubbornly refused to do his duty to his country, the boys, the community and his past friends. Mr. Lybarger has 190 acres of land. a good, comfortable home, $1,000 in Libety bonds, a six-cylinder automobile and other valuable considerations; but when it came to giving where he could realize no return except the satisfaction and pleasure derived by all Americans' doing their duty. Mr Lybarger miserably failed

"Mr. Lybarger's quota was $25, and he offered the committee $10, which was not his proportionate share and could not be conscientiously accepted.

"It is rumored since that he gave $10 to the Paulding county fund.

"Had the community contributed proportionately to what Mr. Lybarger's selfishness and stinginess prompted him to offer, it would have been ashamed to go on record for so small an amount and could not have faced the boys when they come home.

"The committee, in publishing this statement, does so because it is their duty to inform the public of those who refuse to bear their proportionate share of the burden and expense of caring for our soldiers."

Atkinson Resigns

That not only DeKalb county has gone Republican, but the city of Auburn as well, is indicated by the fact that E. W. Atkinson, for five years city attorney, has sent in his resignation to Mayor Walker; and when his successor is appointed, the council will have but two Democratic members, Messrs. Shugars and Draggoo. In view of this fact, Mr. Atkinson announces that his resignation has been made for the reason that he feels that the best interests of the city would be served if the attorney was one of the same political faith as the mayor and the majority of the council.

After the first of January, the board of county commissioners will also be Republican; and, for the same reason, Mr. Atkjnson will tender his resignation as county attorney, in which capacity he has served for the last nine years.

The resignation has not been made on account of any feeling or friction or feeling in either body, but wholly on the conclusion of Mr. Atkinson that it would be for the best interests of all concerned if a Republican were appointed in his place.

Asks For Guardian

Frank Scholes is plaintiff in a petition filed in circuit court for the appointment of a guardian for his mother, Mrs. Mary A. Scholes. Plaintiff states that she is 87 years old and because of her years and bodily infirmities is unable to manage her estate and other business affairs. She is the owner of a life estate in 151 acres of improved farm land and a residence in St. Joe.

Changes in Real Estate

Two deals in real estate in Concord township were made Friday. In the first, Israel Layman conveys to Jay Fetters the northwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 18 Consideration, $3,000.

In the second deal, Israel Layman became the purchaser, buying 42½ acres out of the south side of the same quarter section from M. T. Bishop. Consideration, $3,600.

Notice of Final Settlement of Estate

Notice is hereby given to all persons interested in the estate of McKinley McCurdy, deceased, to appear in the DeKalb circuit court, held at Auburn, Ind., on the 16th day of December, 1918, and show cause, if any, why my final settlement accounts with the estate of said decedent should not be approved; and said heirs and all others interested are notified to then and there make proof of heirship or claim and receive their distributive shares.

Witness, my name, this 18th day of November, 1918.

Gets a Chance To Run Some.

FRANCE, Oct. 29.

DEAR FATHER AND MOTHER:

I will write you a few lines to let you know that I am well and hope you are the same. We are having nice weather now, but the wind is cold. A friend of mine, Eddie Dixon, and I have eleven blankets and a bed tick for our bed, so we ought to sleep warm; and we have a German bed and have a good tent to sleep in and plenty to eat.

I saw a letter one of the boys wrote home and told how poor they were fed and how they went out and captured some Germans, which were nothing but lies. I don't see why they want to write such stuff home. Probably if they should see a German, they would run. I know I had to run last night when a Fritz came over and dropped some bombs. I started for a dugout, falling into a ditch; and I thought he had me, for there were six more cooks piled on top of me. Have lots of fun running for a hole to hide in. Of course, the one that can run the fastest and gets to the hole first, gets to pick his place in the dugout.

The land over here is full of shell holes—will take them forever to fill them up; and there is barbed wire all over here. Looks like it would piece around the world.

The Huns had places up in trees, with ladders run up to the top, where they had places fixed up for machine guns for snipers. They are in trees, shell holes or any other places you can think of; but when the U. S. boys got after them, they moved out of their nests and they haven't had time to make other ones, the way they are going.

I must go to work. So I will ring off.

STATE NEWS

Indianapolis.—Expenditures by the Democratic committee in the recent political campaign in Indiana exceeded those of the Republican state committee by $11,819.68, according to reports filed in the office of the clerk of Marion county. The total expenditures reported by W. M. Fogarty, treasurer of the Democratic committee, were $93,901.64, and the total receipts $102,583.85. The total Republican expenditures, reported by Fred C. Gardner, treasurer, were $82,081.96, and the total receipts $85,211.47, of which $185.22 was carried forward from the campaign of 1916. The expenditures of the Republican county committee exceeded those of the Democratic county committee by $8,516.84. Relly C. Adams, treasurer of the Republican county committee, reported total receipts of $25,788.44 and expenditures of $24,345.57. The total receipts of the Democratic county committee were $16,137.93 and the expenditures were $15,828.73. The itemized accounts show that the bulk of the expenses were for office rent, clerk hire, polling, telephones, advertising, stationery and postage.

Indianapolis.—In overruling demurrers to indictments against men charged with violation of the liquor laws, Judge A. B. Anderson, in federal court, ruled that it is unlawful to bring liquor into Indiana by train, automobile, on person, by wagon, or airship. Judge Anderson also ruled that the proviso of the Redd amendment of the Webb-Kenyon act under which the indictments were drawn providing that the postmaster general publish lists of states wherein were laws prohibiting the soliciting of liquor sales by newspaper or magazine advertising, or through the mails, did not apply to states wherein were laws making shipments of liquor into the state unlawful.

Indianapolis.—The question of placing a surcharge of 10 per cent on the tax duplicates in 1919 to enable municipalities, counties and townships of Indiana to meet the deficits caused largely by the lost of liquor licensesand franchise tax fees, may be brought to the attention of the legislature by the city of Indianapolis. It is estimated that Indianapolis in 1919 will lose approximately $400,000 in liquor license fees and public utility franchise tax fees. The appropriations for operating the city next year exceed the estimated revenues by approximately $260,000, according to Robert H. Bryson, city controller.

Indianapolis.—Requisition by the government of 60 per cent of the butter production of the country apparently is the primary cause of the supposed need for an increase of one per cent in the price of milk in Indianapolis, which Stanley Wyckoff, federal food administrator for Marion county, says seems to be inevitable. Mr. Wyckoff said that investigations he has made have shown that the milk shortage is due to the fact that farmers are selling their butter fat to creameries and feeding skim milk to their hogs.

Anderson.—One hundred head of spotted Poland China hogs were sold at public sale, near Pendleton, for a total of $13,191. The highest price for one hog was $700 for a grand champion brood sow. Three gilts sold for a total of $945. The average price for the entire lot was $128.50. Seven auctioneers and two clerks conducted the sale and more than 1,000 persons attended. In Anderson Wade Donnelly recently sold 200 head of hogs, brood sows selling from $40 to $81. Young stock sold from $10 to $15.

Indianapolis.—Indianapolis millers have raised their bid for No. 2 red wheat in wagons from $2.11, the government fixed minimum for this market, to $2.15. The government ceased apportioning wheat to millers on this crop, and in the scramble for what is left as the government fills its needs, some millers raised the price. Indianapolis millers are meeting competitive bids. They dare not, however, raise the price of flour above the basis of $2.11 wheat.

Indianapolis.—The total of united war work subscriptions in Indiana was $5,693,789.20, according to the bulletin board at state headquarters.

Evansville.—Mr. and Mrs. Israel Brenner of this city have just completed a 35,000-mile automobile tour of the United States that required two years. They visited every state capital and every army cantonment in states that have cantonments and met Evansville soldiers in almost every one.

Indianapolis.—Plans for the fall convention of the Indiana Ice Dealers' association, to have been held in Indianapolis December 4 and 5, were abandoned by the executive committee of the organization because of the influenza situation. Preparations, however, for the annual meeting in March were begun.

Indianapolis. — Governor Goodrich has completed the selection of a committee to arrange for the decoration of a section of Fifth avenue, New York, to greet the soldier boys when they come marching home victorious from the great war. The governor has appointed R. E. Breed, George Ade, Meredith Nicholson, Daniel G. Reid and Guy Walker, all Hoosiers or former Hoosiers. Each state will decorate a part of the street along which the boys will march when they disembark. The Indiana committee also will extend to the returning soldiers an official greeting from Indiana.

Lafayette. — Farms in Indiana which have been on a war basis since the United States entered the conflict against Germany early in 1917, are declared by Purdue university agricultural experts here to be well prepared for the reconstruction period. T. A. Coleman, acting director of the extension department of the local institution, says that Hoosier producers will be able to maintain a maximum production of food as long as the world situation demands. George I. Christie, who is the director of the Purdue farm work, but who now is occupied as assistant secretary of agriculture for the nation, with headquarters at Washington, D. C., believes that it is essential that the food supply of the nation be kept up to the present standard for at least two years more, if a shortage is to be avoided among the peoples of Europe, with attendant disease and social unrest.

Fowler.—A petition for an injunction to prevent the acceptance and payment for the William Fleming gravel road in Pine township has been filed in the Benton county circuit court here. The contractor also has been compelled to pay back $1,230.78 for failure properly to construct five bridges in the county. Several well-to-do farmers in the county, after being unable to get relief from the county commissioners, appealed to Gilbert H. Hendren, chief accountant of the state board of accounts, with headquarters in Indianapolis, to make an investigation of the Fleming highway. An examination was made by A. L. Donaldson, civil engineer, and Ure N. Frazier and Hugh Studebaker, field examiners, and their report was filed here a few days ago.

Indianapolis.—Dissolution of the Liberty Guards is expected to take place soon. The disbanding of the organization will come about by proclamation of the governor. The organization consists of 192 companies, comprising about 15,000 men in all parts of Indiana. Harry B. Smith, adjutant general of Indiana, is commander in chief of the guard. It was formed at the request of the governor early in the war and prepared many persons for military service before they were drafted. It is an organization distinct from the state militia.

Evansville.—For the first time since the beginning of the war, Evansville has a surplus of freight cars for all classes of shipping, according to an announcement of local railroad men. The local car service commission has been dissolved, as there was no further work for the organization to do. According to John C. Keller, traffic commissioner of the chamber of commerce and who was a member of the car service commission, Evansville responded to the plea for intensive loading more liberally than other cities.

Indianapolis.—Leaders of women's organizations interested in the proposal to change the constitution of Indiana have conferred with Governor Goodrich on the subject. It is understood that the women, who formerly led the fight for enactment of a statute calling for a constitutional convention, which later was declared unconstitutional, will ask the next legislature to pass a joint resolution, submitting the question of calling a constitutional convention again to the voters of the state.

Indianapolis. — A program which would call for the expenditure of $4,000,000,000 in highway construction and buildings has been informally discussed by Leo K. Fesler, county auditor, and the county commissioners as the contributors of Marion county to the readjustment and reconstruction of business and industrial conditions.

Richmond.—The Russian language and courses to prepare students for reconstruction work in Russia, will be taught at Earlham college, according to an announcement made by President D. M. Edwards. Quakers will do extensive reconstruction work in Russia and are seeking young men and women to prepare themselves for the calling.

Frankfort.—Clinton county saved practically $1,000 on the election held November 5 over the elections held in past years according to the figures now available. By use of voting machines the number of voting precincts was reduced from 43 to 20 and the amount saved on the boards this year over 1916 was $1,653.43.

Anderson.—According to a wheat acreage survey of Madison county, farmers have sowed 30 per cent more wheat than they had a year ago. H. S. Agster, county agricultural agent, says the total acreage of wheat at this time is 40,400 acres, against a total of 23,000 acres a year ago.

Richmond.—Nina V. Short, county demonstration agent, has resigned to enter hospital work at Washington, D. C. She will be succeeded by Grace Hadley of Purdue university.

Culver.—As a memorial to its former cadets and officers, numbering 34, who have lost their lives in the great war, the trustees of Culver Military academy will erect a $75,000 library.

Bluffton.—Influenza among horses and cattle has made its appearance in Wells county. A herd of cattle shipped to Liberty Center was found infected, but only a few died.

Indianapolis.—Robert K. Devericks, a deputy in the office if Horace Ellis, state superintendent of public instruction, has just compiled a number of school statistics for the state fiscal year which ended September 30, and they show that 20,066 teachers, superintendents and the like are employed in the teaching of 564,152 Hoosier school children at a cost of employment of $12,601,620.68. The teaching is conducted in 8,032 schoolhouses, two of which, in Clark county, are log schoolhouses. These houses and their sites are worth an aggregate of $97,584,358.37.

OUT-OF-ORDINARY PEOPLE

EBERT, NEW GERMAN CHANCELLOR

Friedrich Ebert, the new German chancellor, was vice president of the German social democrats and president of the main committee of the reichstag. Born at Heidelberg in 1871, the son of a tailor, he became a harnessmaker. Later he was editor of a socialist newspaper, and he has been prominent in the party councils for many years. He became a socialist member of the Bremen city council in 1900.

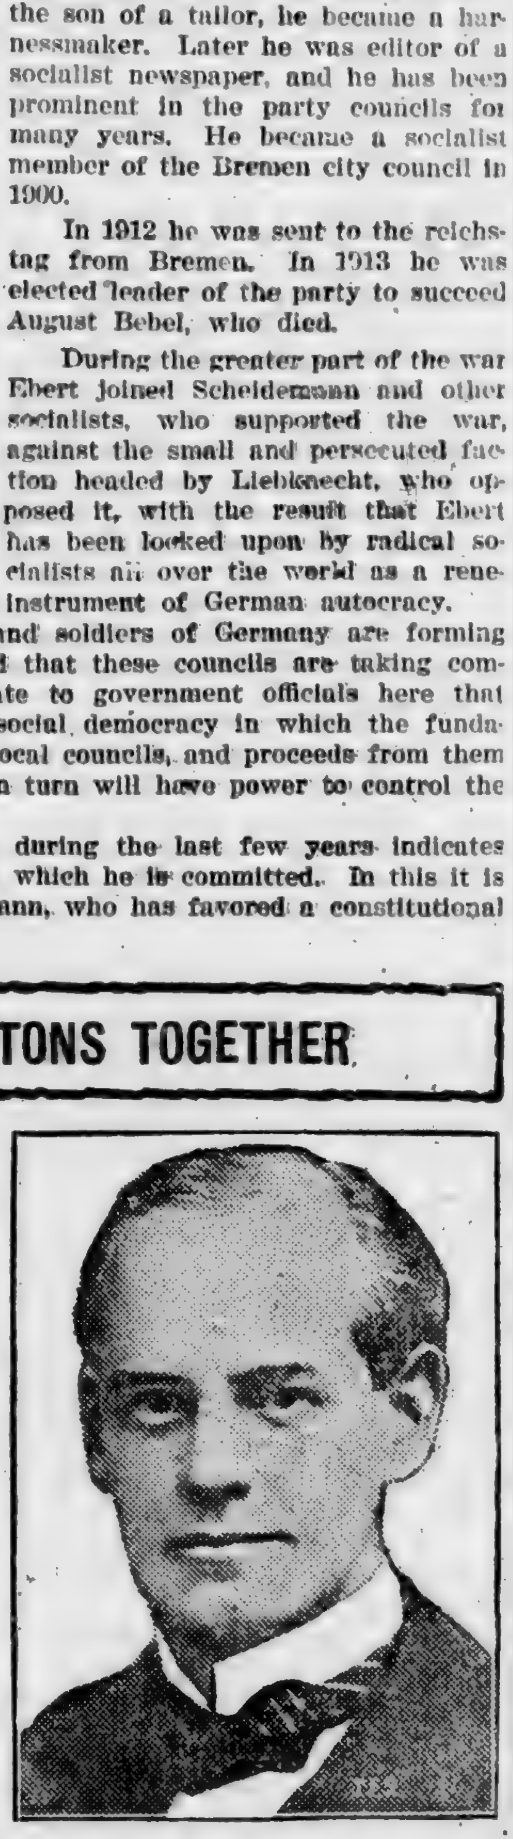
In 1912 he was sent to the reichstag from Bremen. In 1913 he was elected leader of the party to succeed August Bebel, who died.

During the greater part of the war Ebert joined Scheidemann and other socialists, who supported the war, against the small and persecuted faction headed by Liebknecht, who opposed it, with the result that Ebert has been looked upon by radical socialists all over the world as a renegade from socialist principles and an instrument of German autocracy.

The fact that the working men and soldiers of Germany are forming councils in every city and district and that these councils are taking command of the local government indicate to government officials here that Germany is preparing to establish a social democracy in which the fundamental governing power lies with the local councils, and proceeds from them to state and national councils which in turn will have power to control the administrative officials.

Hasty review of Ebert's speeches during the last few years indicates that this is the form of government to which he is committed. In this it is said he has been opposed to Scheidemann, who has favored a constitutional monarchy.

YANKS AND BRITONS TOGETHER



John Galsworthy, the English novelist, believes that the peace and welfare of the world largely depend upon the Americans and British getting together. A good many other people think the same thing. Mr. Galsworthy says in the Yale Review:

"Under the pressure of this war there is, beneath the lip service we pay to democracy, a disposition to lose faith in it because of its undoubted weakness and inconvenience in a struggle with states autocratically governed; there is even a sort of secret reaction to autocracy.

"On those lines there is no way out of a future of bitter rivalries, chicanery and wars, and the probable total failure of our civilization. The only cure which I can see lies in democratizing the whole world and removing the present weakness and shams of democracy by education of the individual conscience in every country. Good-by to that chance if Americans and Britons fall foul of each other, refuse to pool their thoughts and hopes and to keep the general welfare of mankind in view. They have got to stand together, not in aggressive and jealous policies, but in defense and championship of the self-helpful, self-governing, 'live and let live' philosophy of life."

AMERICA MUST FEED STARVING

The name of Herbert Hoover, American food administrator, is a household word among hundreds of millions of people. It is now to become even more widely known. For it now looks as if the United States will have to feed vanquished as well as victors. And Herbert Hoover is to be at the head of the work.

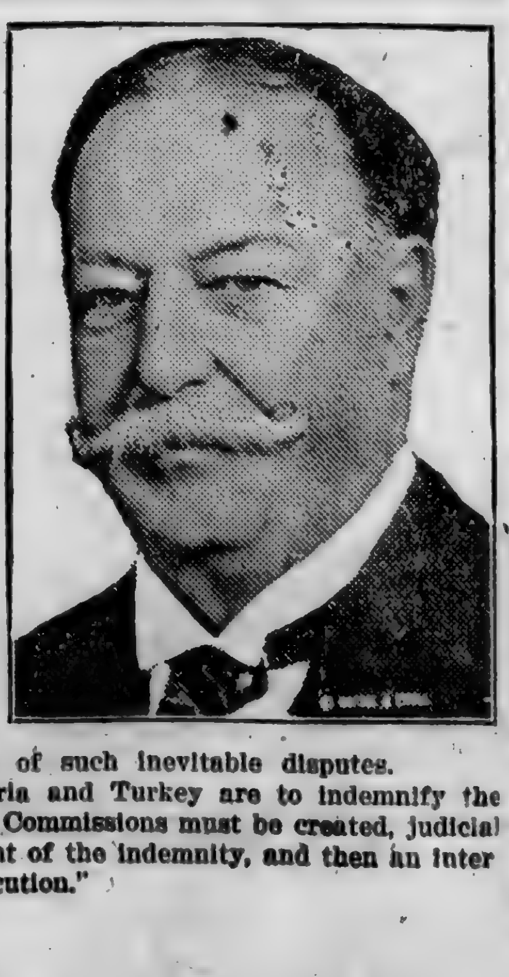
In keeping with our national reputation for high ideals we must divide our bread with the hungry, no matter who the hungry may be. Much of Europe is reported to be facing actual starvation. Besides, we must keep the Germans alive in order that they may be able to pay the debts they owe to civilization and humanity.

Mr. Hoover has gone to Europe as America's special representative to organize a system of food relief in co-operation with the various governments concerned.

The first work will be to perfect and enlarge the arrangements for foodstuffs to the populations in Belgium and France now being released.

The second portion of Mr. Hoover's mission is to organize and determine the need of foodstuffs of the liberated peoples in southern Europe—the Czecho-Slovaks, the Jugo-Slovaks, the Serbians, Roumanians and others. An adequate food supply will assist the governments set up to maintain order.

ADEQUATE MACHINERY FOR PEACE



Former President Taft is the foremost champion of the League to Enforce Peace.

"We don't have to argue for a league to enforce peace now," he says. "The war developments recently have been of such a nature that the congress of nations which will shortly meet to agree upon peace terms will have to create such a body in order to see that the convention terms are complied with.

"We know that we have got to rearrange the map of Europe, and, in so far as it is practicable in that arrangement, to follow popular choice of the people to be governed. But such a flowing phrase will not settle the difficulty, and after the congress shall have made the decisions, sore places will be left, local enmities will arise, and if that permanent peace which justifies the war is to be attained, the world compact must itself contain the machinery for settlement of such inevitable disputes.

"Germany and Austria and Bulgaria and Turkey are to indemnify the countries which they have devastated. Commissions must be created, judicial in their nature, to pass upon the amount of the indemnity, and then an international force must exist to levy execution."

Spiritual Munitions

By NORREYS JEPHSON O'CONOR
of The Vigilantes

There has of late shown itself a tendency to tax, and to estimate as useless, the work of American writers who, despite the chaos of war, continue to practice their profession. In the minds of some people who are men of action and affairs rather than of contemplation and of dreams, the imagination should be set at rest and only immediate action allowed to count for anything in this present struggle. How false is such reasoning may be illustrated by the example both of our enemies and of our allies. Certainly the German writers had quite as much to do with bringing to pass the events of August, 1914, as politicians and soldiers; think of the widespread influence of Treitschke and Nietzsche, the training of German thought by these men and their followers, even the glorification of the all-conquering hero in the music dramas of Wagner. It is indeed the singers and sayers of Germany who prepared the way for the soldiers, giving shape to the ideal which these soldiers set out to create. The potency of the pen, its ability to accomplish that which armed men fail to do is well illustrated by the subjugation of Russia.

Morale to Conquer.

How well have our allies appreciated the necessity of great spiritual vitality in enabling armies to sustain the morale to conquer! In the turmoil of the March drive France found time to appoint an official representative to conduct in Switzerland an exhibition of Rodin's sculpture. The desire of the French government to establish Y. M. C. A. huts behind the French lines is further proof of the effort to keep the soldier in touch with spiritual forces.

The interrelation between the spiritual and physical prowess of man was understood in the earliest ages of European history, when the bards of ancient Ireland accompanied armies to battle in order to celebrate the deeds and histories of kings and heroes. Shall we be behind our forefathers in understanding this rudimentary psychology?

Englishmen who have known the rigor of warfare in trench and field have suddenly found in themselves the impulse to expression, and have produced a garland of song which will forever leave a gentle fragrance about these embattled years. Not since the age of Elizabeth have adventurers in war been such brave adventurers in song; the war has been favorable to the minor poet.

Duty of Writers.

Wordsworth, writing a hundred years ago in the seclusion of the English lakes, may have had a far greater influence upon the history of his time than anyone has dared to think. Certainly, during the first few months of this war, English journals turned to the sonnets of the greatest of poets, [illegible] and for the expression in words of English ideals.

To writers, therefore, falls a distinct duty in wartime; it is for them to [illegible] ideals of the nation. The soldier becomes for a moment the living embodiment of these ideals, but when the noise of battle rolls by and the frenzy of the conflict is forgotten it is the words of the author which remain to succeeding generations; after the burning bush the still small voice. All worthy and idealistic literature should be encouraged at the present time; the writers of the nation are officers of the army and navy no less that the men who bear the president's commission. Let our authors see that our fighting men, well supplied with cartridges, with equipment and with food, do not lack spiritual munitions, that our soldiers may say, in the words of W. B. Yeats: "Dreams, which have had dreams for fathers, live in us!"

A REFLECTION

By THOMAS ADDISON
of the Vigilantes.

Not yet has America found her soul, but she is trembling on the verge. Everywhere the signs of it are apparent. In a hundred individual cases, my own included, I have discovered the evidences of spiritual growth.

I find it in the larger tolerance we accord the shortcomings of others, and in the frank desire we experience to overcome our own; in the greater kindness, sympathy, compassion we extend to those in need; in the courage of sacrifice for the common good; in the putting aside of self to forward our country's righteous cause; in our reverence of the flag whose stars are heaven-born in the high hopes they symbolize; in short, in a sincere unity of endeavor, founded in fraternal concord, to advance to loftier planes of living than we have ever known before.

For at least this much we have William of Germany to thank. He has shown us the horror of satanic dominion, and we have recoiled from it toward the Kingdom of God. Desecration has impelled us toward consecration. And when at last, as a people, we are purified of the dross of long years of fattened ease, and the true gold of the spirit of Christ finds full reflection in us, then will America have made the supreme discovery—will have found her soul.

TO OUR GIRLS

By AMELIA JOSEPHINE BURR
of the Vigilantes.

Our country gives the sons that she has treasured
To suffer—and to die, perhaps—for you.
By God's own standards let your gifts be measured
And to their highest, hold your champions true.
To keep our country free, our children fearless,
Our women clean, they face the hell of war.
Arm them with memories pure to courage peerless
Give them a womanhood worth dying for!

Tawdry Things

By EVA DEAN
of The Vigilantes

If only we could hear them oftener —those stories of the battlefields. Over there they are as common as speech itself—true stories—wonderful ones—tales that will dim the imaginations of the boldest of the old romancers. And in addition to being true, the heroes of them are our own boys; our best beloved ones, or our neighbors; or perhaps the boy we never really noticed, though he brought the vegetables to our door every day. Or it may be a boy from the next town, or from Maine, or Alabama—but our boys!

And one or two that I heard this week recall a story I was told by an English girl, the first year of the war. It was the story of a neighboring lad who was at last permitted a few days' leave from the trenches to go home. He had hungered for home so; and how the family had counted on his coming! And yet he had gone back to the trenches even a little before his leave was up. When they had asked him why, all he could say was: "Oh—the family all got so upset, just because the butcher didn't come!"

The boy had gone home expecting to be appreciated. He was worn, fagged, and educated by his experiences. He had felt he would be rightly valued—at home. But the whole family was upset—just because the butcher failed to come. As if it mattered—now—what became of a butcher! To make such a fuss about that! How little and trivial was their world!

One of last week's stories was from a young corporal—one of ours. Part of it was of a comrade, a sensitive boy, with an artist's soul. He was not a fighter; he was a dreamer. The young corporal loved him, and yet he had always been oppressed by a horrible fear that when the test came, his young comrade would fail. The corporal suffered in his fear!

Of course the test did come. There had been a long day of it—with heartrending details. At night there was the ammunition to move for the next day, for, as part of the road over which it must go was exposed to the sight and range of the enemy's guns it must be moved at night.

There had been first one breakdown and then another, so that dawn was near when the ammunition finally reached the front. By the time the boys started back, it was full daylight and Boche guns were sputtering constantly. One shell broke close upon another, as they hurried along. One broke behind the corporal, and he looked back. The beloved comrade was gone—and he had not failed.

We can understand—better now—how this corporal would feel, if the family had got all upset—about the butcher, or the department store's late delivery!

They tell us that some of our young officers are so changed in their first six weeks over there, that friends might not at first recognize them. It is not from suffering or privation —for there has been none; it is only from what they have learned. And they who know tell us our chiefest struggle must be to realize ourselves what they are realizing; and it is much harder for us. We do ourselves injury if we turn away with the words: "It is so horrible I cannot think of it!" The danger is that when our boys come back we will have nothing in common with them. Although dearer than ever, our boys will have grown away from us. We will seem trivial and unsatisfactory to them.

Perhaps a hint dropped all unconsciously last week by an eighteen-year-old soldier, may be valuable: "The silk stockings that our girls all wear look so tawdry to me now."

SPIES

By COURTNEY RYLEY COOPER
of the Vigilantes.

This remark is accredited to Count Johann von Bernstorff, ambassador of imperial Germany to the United States of America, following the taking of secret pictures of a review of the United States army—pictures which Bernstorff had snapped with a concealed camera placed inside a pair of field glasses:

"Take these to General Hindenburg. I feel sure he will be interested in these tin soldiers that America calls an army."

In the light of recent events from the fighting lines of Europe, one cannot help wondering what Bernstorff and Hindenburg now think of those "tin soldiers."

Carolyn of the Corners

BY RUTH BELMORE ENDICOTT

Copyright, 1918, by Dodd, Mead & Company, Inc.

CAROLYN MAY LEARNS SOME DISQUIETING NEWS FROM CHET GORMLEY.

Synopsis.—Her father and mother reported lost at sea when the Dunraven, on which they had sailed for Europe, was sunk, Carolyn May Cameron—Hanna's Car'lyn—is sent from New York to her bachelor uncle, Joseph Stagg, at the Corners. The reception given her by her uncle is not very enthusiastic. Carolyn is also chilled by the stern demeanor of Aunty Rose, Uncle Joe's housekeeper. Stagg is dismayed when he learns from a lawyer friend of his brother-in-law that Carolyn has been left practically penniless and consigned to his care as guardian. Carolyn learns of the estrangement between her uncle and his one-time sweetheart, Amanda Parlow, and the cause of the bitterness between the two families. Prince, the mongrel dog that Carolyn brought with her, and the boon companion of the lonesome girl, is in disfavor with Uncle Joe, who threatens to dispose of him, but Prince becomes a hero and wins the approval of the Corners by routing a tramp in the act of robbing the schoolteacher. The following Sunday, while Carolyn and her uncle, accompanied by Prince, are taking a walk in the woods they encounter Amanda Parlow. Prince kills a snake about to strike Amanda, and Stagg and Amanda speak to each other for the first time in years.

CHAPTER VIII.

—9—

Chet Gormley Tells Some News.

It was when she came in sight of the Parlow place on Monday afternoon, she and Prince, that Carolyn May bethought her of the very best person in the world with whom to advise upon the momentous question which so troubled her.

Who could be more interested in the happiness of Miss Amanda than Mr. Parlow himself?

The little girl had been going to call on Miss Amanda. Aunty Rose had said she might and Miss Amanda had invited her "specially."

But the thought of taking the old carpenter into her confidence and advising with him delayed that visit. Mr. Parlow was busy on some piece of cabinet work, but he nodded briskly to the little girl when she came to the door of the shop and looked in.

"Are you very busy, Mr. Parlow?" she asked him after a watchful minute or two.

"My hands be, Car'lyn May," said the carpenter in his dry voice.

"Oh!"

"But I kin listen to ye—and I kin talk."

"Oh, that's nice! Did you hear about what happened yesterday?"

"Eh?" he queried, eying her quizzically. "Does anything ever happen on Sunday?"

"Something did on this Sunday," cried the little girl. "Didn't you hear about the snake?"

"What d'ye mean—snake?"

And then little Carolyn May explained. She told the story with such earnestness that he stopped working to listen.

"Humph!" was his grunted comment at the end. "Well!"

"Don't you think that was real exciting?" asked Carolyn May. "And just see how it almost brought my Uncle Joe and your Miss Amanda together. Don't you see?"

Mr. Parlow actually jumped. "What's that you say, child?" he rasped out grimly. "Bring Mandy and Joe Stagg together? Well, I guess not!"

"Oh, Mr. Parlow, don't you think that would be just be-a-you-ti-ful?" cried the little girl with a lingering emphasis upon the most important word. "Don't you see how happy they would be?"

"I don't know as anybody's per-tic'lar anxious to see that daughter of mine and Joe Stagg friendly again. No good would come of it."

Carolyn May looked at him sorrowfully. Mr. Parlow had quite disappointed her. It was plain to be seen that he was not the right one to advise with about the matter. The little girl sighed.

"I really did s'pose you'd want to see Miss Amanda happy, Mr. Parlow," she whispered.

"Happy? Bah!" snarled the old man, setting vigorously to work again. He acted as if he wished to say no more and let the little girl depart without another word.

Carolyn May really could not understand it—at least she could not immediately.

That Mr. Parlow might have a selfish reason for desiring to keep his daughter and Joseph Stagg apart did not enter the little girl's mind.

After that Sunday walk, however, Carolyn May was never so much afraid of her uncle as before. Why, he had even called Prince "good dog!" Truly Mr. Joseph Stagg was being transformed—if slowly.

He could not deny to himself that, to a certain extent, he was enjoying the presence of his little niece at The Corners. If he only could decide just what to do with the personal property of his sister Hannah and her husband down in the New York apartment. Never in his life had he been so long deciding a question.

He had really loved Hannah. He knew it now, did Joseph Stagg, every time he looked at the lovely little child who had come to live with him at The Corners. Why! just so had Hannah looked when she was a little thing. The same deep, violet eyes and sunny hair and laughing lips—

Mr. Stagg sometimes actually found a reflection of the cheerful figure of "Hannah's Car'lyn" coming between him and the big ledger over which he spent so many of his waking hours.

Once he looked up from the ledger—it was on a Saturday morning—and really did see the bright figure of the little girl standing before him. It was no dream or fancy, for old Jimmy, the cat, suddenly shot to the topmost shelf, squalling with wild abandon. Prince was nosing along at Carolyn May's side.

"Bless me!" croaked Mr. Stagg. "That dog of yours, Car'lyn May, will give Jimmy a conniption fit yet. What d'you want down here?"

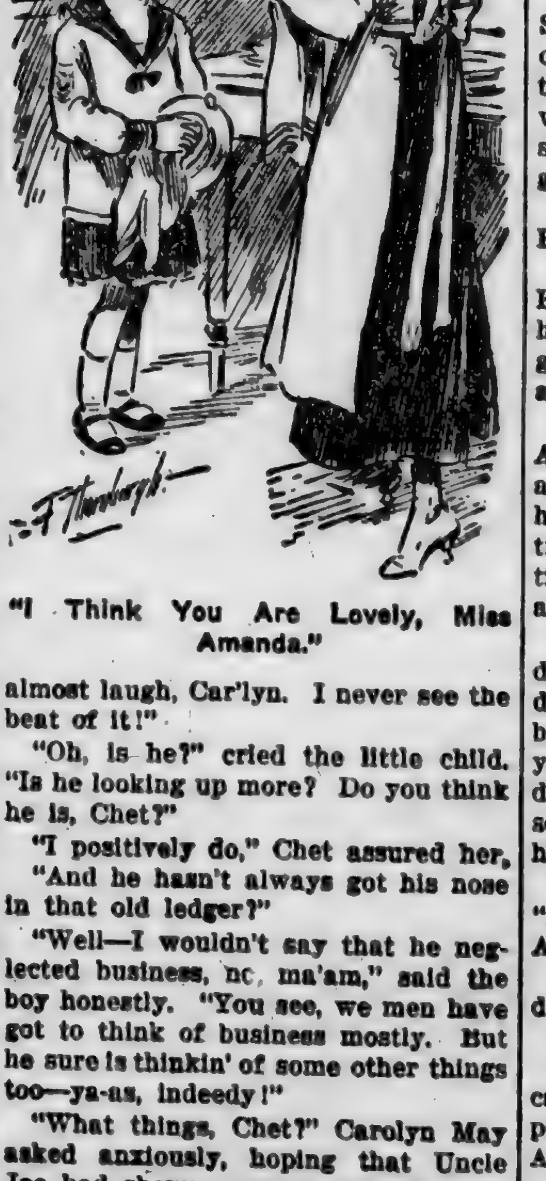
Carolyn May told him. A man had come to the house to buy a cow and Aunty Rose had sent the little girl down to tell Mr. Stagg to come home and "drive his own bargain."

"Well, well," said Mr. Stagg, locking the ledger in the safe, "I'll hustle right out and tend to it. Don't see why the man couldn't have waited till noontime. Hey, you, Chet! Look out for the store. Don't have any fooling. And—"

"Oh, uncle! may I stay, too? Me and Prince?" cried Carolyn May. "We'll be good."

"Pshaw! Yes, if you want to," responded Mr. Stagg, hurrying away.

"My! your uncle's changin' more and more, ain't he?" remarked Chet, the optimistic. "He does sometimes almost laugh, Car'lyn. I never see the beat of it!"



"I Think You Are Lovely, Miss Amanda."

"Oh, is he?" cried the little child. "Is he looking up more? Do you think he is, Chet?"

"I positively do," Chet assured her. "And he hasn't always got his nose in that old ledger?"

"Well—I wouldn't say that he neglected business, no, ma'am," said the boy honestly. "You see, we men have got to think of business mostly. But he sure is thinkin' of some other things too—ya-as, indeedy!"

"What things, Chet?" Carolyn May asked anxiously, hoping that Uncle Joe had shown some recovered interest in Miss Amanda and that Chet had noticed it.

"Why—well— Now, you see, there's that house you used to live in. You know about that?"

"What about it, Chet?" the little girl asked rather timidly.

"Well, Mr. Stagg ain't never done nothin' about it. He ain't sold it, nor sold the furniture, nor nothin'. You know, Car'lyn May, your folks didn't leave you no money."

"Oh! Didn't they?" cried Carolyn May, greatly startled.

"No. You see, I heard all about it. Mr. Vickers, the lawyer, came in here one day and your uncle read a letter to him out loud. I couldn't help but hear. The letter was from another lawyer and 'twas all about you and your concerns. I heard it all," said the quite innocent Chet.

"And Mr. Vickers says: 'So the child hasn't anything of her own, Joe?'" Chet went on. "And your uncle says: 'Not a dollar, 'cept what I might sell that furniture for.' And he hasn't sold it yet, I know. He just can't make up his mind to sell them things that was your mother's, Car'lyn May," added the boy, with a deeper insight into Mr. Stagg's character than one might have given him credit for possessing.

But Carolyn May had heard some news that made her suddenly quiet and she was glad a customer came into store just then to draw Chet Gormley's attention.

The child had never thought before about how the good things of life came to her—her food, clothes and lodging. But now Chet Gormley's chattering had given her a new view of the facts of the case. There had been no money left to spend for her needs. Uncle Joe was just keeping her out of charity!

"And Prince, too," thought the little girl, with a lump in her throat. "He hasn't got any more home than a rabbit! And Uncle Joe don't really like dogs—not even now.

"Oh, dear me!" pursued Carolyn May. "It's awful hard to be an orphan. But to be a poor orphan—just a charity one—is a whole lot worse, I guess. I wonder if I ought to stay with Uncle Joe and Aunty Rose and make them so much trouble?"

The thought bit deep into the little girl's very impressionable mind. She wished to be alone and to think over this really tragic thing that faced her—the ugly fact that she was a "charity child."

"And you're a charity dog, Prince Cameron," she said aloud, looking down at the mongrel who walked sedately beside her along the country road.

The little girl had loitered along the road until it was now dinner time. Indeed, Aunty Rose would have had the meal on the table twenty minutes earlier. Mr. Stagg had evidently remained at The Corners to sell the cow and eat dinner too—thus "killing two birds with one stone."

And here Carolyn May and Prince were at Mr. Parlow's carpenter shop, just as the old man was taking off his apron preparatory to going in to his dinner. When Miss Amanda was away nursing, the carpenter ate at a neighbor's table.

Now Miss Amanda appeared on the side porch.

"Where are you going, little girl?" she asked, smiling.

"Home to Aunty Rose," said Carolyn May bravely. "But I guess I'm late for dinner."

"Don't you want to come in and eat with us, Carolyn May? Your own dinner will be cold."

"Oh, may I?" cried the little girl. Somehow she did not feel that she could face Uncle Joe just now with this new thought that Chet Gormley's words had put into her heart. Then she hesitated, with her hand on the gate latch.

"Will there be some scraps for Prince?" she asked. "Or bones?"

"I believe I can find something for Prince," Miss Amanda replied. "I owe him more than one good dinner, I guess, for killing that snake. Come in and we will see."

Carolyn May thought that Miss Amanda, in her house dress and ruffled apron, with sleeves turned back above her dimpled, brown elbows, was prettier than ever. Her cheerful observations quite enlivened Carolyn May again.

"I think you are lovely, Miss Amanda," she said as she helped wipe the dishes after the carpenter had gone back to the shop. "I shall always love you. I guess that anybody who ever did love you would keep right on doing so till they died! They just couldn't help it!"

"Indeed?" said the woman, laughing. "And how about you, Chicken Little? Aren't you universally beloved too?"

"Oh, I don't expect so, Miss Amanda," said the child. "I wish I was."

"Why aren't you?"

"I—I— Well, I guess it's just because I'm not," Carolyn May said desperately. "You see, after all, Miss Amanda, I'm only a charity child."

"Oh, my child!" exclaimed Miss Amanda. "Who told you that?"

"I—I just heard about it," confessed the little visitor.

"Not from Aunty Rose Kennedy?"

"Oh, no, ma'am."

"Did that— Did your uncle tell you such a thing?"

"Oh, no! He's just as good as he can be. But of course he doesn't like children. You know he doesn't. And he just 'bominates dogs!

Carolyn and Prince have another adventure, in which they play the part of good Samaritans. Watch for the next installment.

Table Decorations

In table decorations this year Santa Claus will beam from the midst of patriotic place-cards and the national colors mingle with the regulation green and red. Here are little figures made of crepe paper, representing America, England and France. They are simply little pasteboard paper dolls with printed or painted faces, dressed up in paper clothes and tiny paper hats. To make the table complete, Belgium, Italy and Serbia are to be represented. Each little figure might bear a tiny flag. They are supported by strips of cardboard pasted to them at the back and are to be used for place-cards or merely for ornament.

A larger figure of Santa Claus is also made of crepe paper with the help of white cotton. It is built on a stick, with wires attached for arms and legs. On this frame a body of cotton is fashioned, wound to place with thread. The head is a ball of cotton covered with pink crepe paper. The eyes are painted on and cotton makes the eyebrows and beard. Red crepe paper and cotton form the coat and hat.

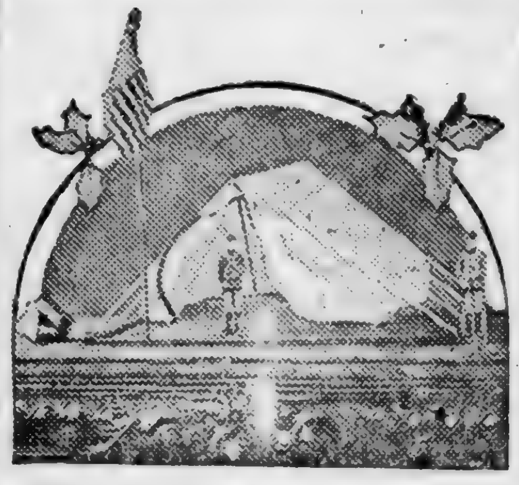
Holiday Candle Shades

When Christmas comes all the candles deserve to be dressed up with new shades, and everyone is happy when these are among the gifts that the morning discloses. This year's shades are mostly made of parchment, painted with conventional flowers in bright colors. Whoever can handle oil colors and a brush is sure of pleasing friends.

Hand-Knit Sweaters

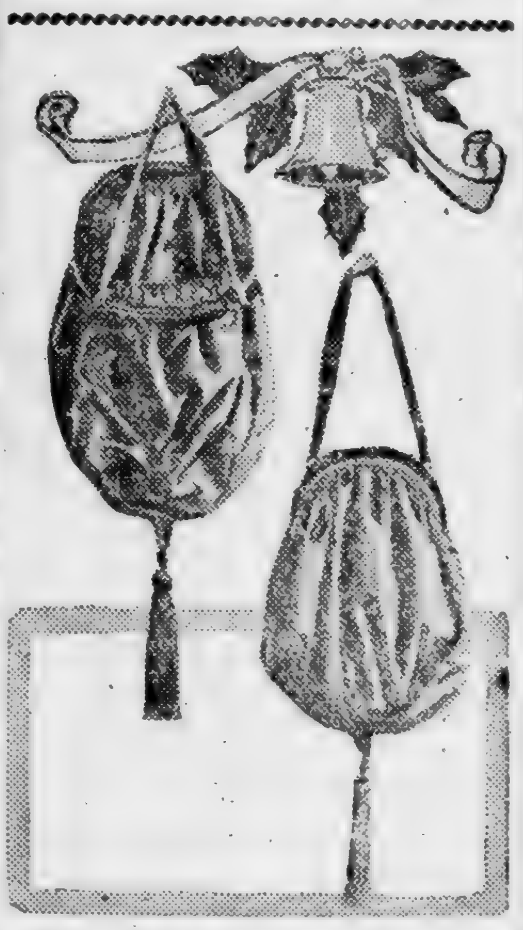
One can gauge a deep affection with one of these smart, hand-knit sweaters that are worn by women, lucky enough to own them, everywhere. This one is made of turquoise blue zephyr with white bands at the wrists and across the collar. They are made in rose and white or in pale green or yellow with white bars.

For the Small Boy



Here is a tent made of strong, unbleached domestic, bound with red braid which will rejoice the heart of the small boy. It is about eighteen inches long and is set up on a frame of wood that supports a small rod of wood at the front and back. A third rod forms the ridge-pole. Four tape loops are stitched to each side of the tent and slipped over tacks in the sides of the supporting frame. A little flag, a pair of paper soldiers and a wooden cannon, make up an outfit that will launch a delighted little chap on a military career a half minute after he discovers it. The tent is easy to make and the soldiers are cut out of printed paper.

Silk Shopping Bag



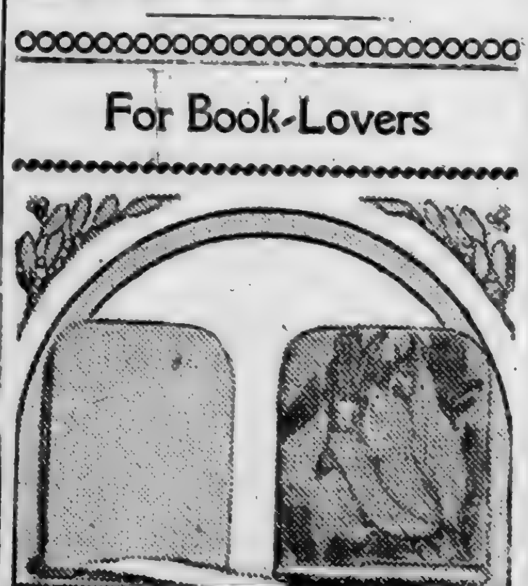
Whoever she is, she will love this shopping bag of taffeta silk with its celluloid mountings, but if it matches her street suit in color her joy in it will be complete. This one is of navy blue taffeta lined with bright red taffeta. The celluloid mounting is of the same red and so is the long silk tassel. The bag is suspended by a strap of the navy silk.

A Gift for Him

Shaving Papers
Brush and Comb
Collars

A collar box, a bag for brush and comb and a pad of shaving paper will please one's men friends, whether they travel much or not; but the traveler will be thrice grateful for them. They are made of heavy unbleached linen and embroidered with colored floss. One might embroider a handsome monogram instead of a flower design on them and solve the difficult problem of a gift for him.

For Book-Lovers



Book lovers will appreciate these book-ends, covered with tapestry and lined with silk, and they are easy to make. Among office furnishings the foundations of thin metal are to be found. These are first padded with blotting paper—glued to them—then the tapestry and silk covering is sewed over them and finally a silk cord is tacked about the edges. For a bedroom the covering might be of cretonne. The pair shown here has a covering of tapestry in dark colors.

THE JOY OF MOTHERHOOD

Came to this Woman after Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to Restore Her Health

Ellensburg, Wash.—"After I was married I was not well for a long time and a good deal of the time was not able to go about. Our greatest desire was to have a child in our home and one day my husband came back from town with a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and wanted me to try it. It brought relief from my troubles. I improved in health so I could do my housework; we now have a little one, all of which I owe to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. O. S. JOHNSON, R. No. 3, Ellensburg, Wash.

There are women everywhere who long for children in their homes yet are denied this happiness on account of some functional disorder which in most cases would readily yield to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Such women should not give up hope until they have given this wonderful medicine a trial, and for special advice write Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. The result of 40 years experience is at your service.

ORIGIN OF WORD "ROORBACK"

Name Given to First Notable Campaign Lie, of Which James K. Polk Was the Victim.

In 1844 James K. Polk was nominated by the Democrats for president. After the nomination the Albany Journal published what purported to be an extract from Roorback's Journal, of a trip through the South, represented to have been made some few years before, in which he told of seeing a gang of colored men being driven to the Southern market, all branded "J. K. P.," as the property of James K. Polk. The object was to stigmatize Polk as a heartless slave owner. The publication was resented by the Democrats as a forgery and a libel on their candidate, and so it proved to be, for it turned out that there was no such person as Roorback and that the pretended letter was written by a disreputable politician of New York who posed as an abolitionist. The incident caused much hard feeling and the word roorback became a synonym for a campaign lie.

During the courtship it is a case of suspense with the girl, and a case of expense with the youth.

Landlord's Experience With Glando

Mr. Haushalter, the well known and energetic proprietor of the Hotel Paulding, Paulding, Ohio, says that for several years he suffered from a sluggish liver, backache and kidney trouble. He felt so drowsy and languid he could scarcely drag. He says: "I tried a number of kidney pills and liver remedies and found no relief until I used Glando, the great gland tonic. It proved to be just what I needed. I am thoroughly convinced I would have been flat on my back if I had not used this treatment; but, instead of being laid up, I am feeling fine and looking after my business every day. If I feel any indication of my old trouble returning, I take a Glando treatment and that sets me right."

Mr. Haushalter was dying of self-poisoning caused by an inactive liver. This weakened the kidneys and other glands of the body. If he had not found a remedy that renewed glandular activity and removed the poison, his life undoubtedly have paid the penalty.

Glando Tonic is the only remedy of its kind on the market and its numerous cures is proof enough of its great value to mankind. It is sold by druggists or will be sent direct by the Gland-Aid Co., Fort Wayne, Ind. Large treatment, $1.00.

ADVICE TO "FLU" CONVALESCENTS

SPAIN AND ENGLAND REPORT INCREASE IN TUBERCULOSIS AFTER INFLUENZA EPIDEMIC.

U. S. Public Health Service Warns Public Against Tuberculosis. One Million Cases Tuberculosis in United States—Each a Source of Danger.

Influenza Convalescents Should Have Lungs Examined—Colds Which Hang On Often Beginning of Tuberculosis. No Cause for Alarm if Tuberculosis Is Recognized Early—Patent Medicines Not to Be Trusted.

> Beware tuberculosis after influenza. No need to worry if you take precautions in time.
>
> Don't diagnose your own condition. Have your doctor examine your lungs several times at monthly intervals. Build up your strength with right living, good food and plenty of fresh air.
>
> Don't waste money on patent medicines advertised to cure tuberculosis.
> Become a fresh-air crank and enjoy life.

Washington, D. C.—(Special.)—According to a report made to the United States Public Health Service, the epidemic of influenza in Spain has already caused an increase in the prevalence and deaths from pulmonary tuberculosis. A similar association between influenza and tuberculosis was recently made by Sir Arthur Newsholme, the chief medical officer of the English public health service, in his analysis of the tuberculosis death rate in England.

In order that the people of the United States may profit by the experience of other countries Surgeon General Rupert Blue of the United States Public Health Service has just issued a warning emphasizing the need of special precautions at the present time. "Experience seems to indicate," says the Surgeon General, "that persons whose resistance has been weakened by an attack of influenza are peculiarly susceptible to tuberculosis. With millions of its people recently affected with influenza this country now offers conditions favoring the spread of tuberculosis."

One Million Consumptives in the United States.

"Then you consider this a serious menace?" was asked. "In my opinion it is, though I hasten to add it is distinctly one against which the people can guard. So far as one can estimate there are at present about one million cases of tuberculosis in the United States. There is unfortunately no complete census available to show exactly the number of tuberculosis persons in each state despite the fact that most of the states have made the disease reportable. In New York city, where reporting has been in force for many years, over 35,000 cases of tuberculosis are registered with the Department of Health. Those familiar with the situation believe that the addition of unrecognized and unreported cases would make the number nearer 50,000. The very careful health survey conducted during the past two years in Framingham, Mass., revealed 200 cases of tuberculosis in a population of approximately 15,000. If these proportions hold true for the United States as a whole they would indicate that about one in every hundred persons is tuberculous. Each of these constitutes a source of danger to be guarded against."

What to Do.

In his statement to the public Surgeon General Blue points out how those who have had influenza should protect themselves against tuberculosis. "All who have recovered from influenza," says the Surgeon General, "should have their lungs carefully examined by a competent physician. In fact, it is desirable to have several examinations made a month apart. Such examinations cannot be made through the clothing nor can they be carried out in two or three minutes. If the lungs are found to be free from tuberculosis every effort should be made to keep them so. This can be done by right living, good food and plenty of fresh air."

Danger Signs.

The Surgeon General warned especially against certain danger signs, such as "decline" and "colds which hang on."

These, he explained, were often the beginning of tuberculosis. "If you do not get well promptly, if your cold seems to hang on or your health and strength decline, remember that these are often the early signs of tuberculosis. Place yourself at once under the care of a competent physician. Tuberculosis is curable in the early stages.

Patent Medicines Dangerous in Tuberculosis.

"Above all do not trust in the misleading statements of unscrupulous patent medicine fakers. There is no specific medicine for the cure of tuberculosis. The money spent on such medicines is thrown away; it should be spent instead for good food and decent living."

Work Is Finished

The DeKalb county conscription board, in common with all other similar bodies in the United States, will cease to exist on Dec. 10. This action will be taken by order of higher authorities. The members of the board—Messrs. Baltz, Austin and Dennison—are no doubt pleased at being relieved of this duty: for the work has been arduous and without pay and has subjected them to much unjust criticism. From the time of the organization of the board to the present, they have been in session over 3,000 hours.

All books and records of the board will be carefully packed and the boxes sealed and stored for future reference in connection with war insurance and pension work.

John George and family were at Concord, Sunday morning, also took dinner with Alfred Reasoner and wife.

Ed Leighty and wife were guests of William Leighty at Chicago, a few days last week, returning Sunday evening.

Complaint on Note.

A complaint on a promissory note has been filed in the circuit court by the St. Joe Valley bank against Harry Jones, Laura D. Maxwell and George W. Baker.

It is set out that Harry Jones and Laura D. Maxwell on Sept. 9, 1916, gave William Curie a note for $84, payable a year later, and that Mr. Curie assigned the note to the bank. No payment has been made and a judgment for $125 is demanded.

It is stated in the complaint that George W. Baker is indebted to the other defendants in the sum of $125 An attempt is made to attach this money for the benefit of the bank. Michael F. Long of Butler, also makes an affidavit as a claimant.

Edgar W. Atkinson is attorney for the bank and W. P. Endicott represents Mr. Long.

Christmas Gifts and Good Will.

YOU know, the value of a gift isn't in what it costs, but in the good will it represents.

Just now, when the world needs it more than anything else, it is a good idea to put extra emphasis on the "GOOD WILL."

For reasons of economy, all gifts this year should be USEFUL GIFTS; find out what your friends and loved ones really need; something he or she will have to buy anyway, sooner or later; give something like that

There are plenty of such gifts; you'll find lots of them here in our store—Gifts suitable for Men. Buy Christmas things early; it's a government request.

Fifteen Million Tons of Shipping

Building 15,000,000 tons of shipping is the big job laid out for American Shipyards. It will take years to do this. Men working in shipyards are assured of steady jobs if they make good. This great fleet of ships must be built. The United States is going to become the first maritime nation of the world.

We need men accustomed to out-of-doors work to help us build ships. The pay is set by the Emergency Fleet Corporation under direct Government control, and is higher than ever before in the history of the industry. Do not hesitate because you have never worked in a shipyard before. We will train you for some good job and will pay you well while you are learning.

It will take us years to build our share of 15,000,000 tons.

Noble county as well as DeKalb county has been asked to join with Allen county in the building of a large tuberculosis sanatorium for the care of returned soldiers with the disease and others. The idea seems to be a practical one and a united effort along this line will save money for each county.

The small number of marriage licenses issued in DeKalb county during the month of November broke a record of many years standing. The number was only three. Those connected with court house affairs have no recollection of any month when there were such few marriage licenses granted. A quick increase is anticipated, however, when the soldiers get home.

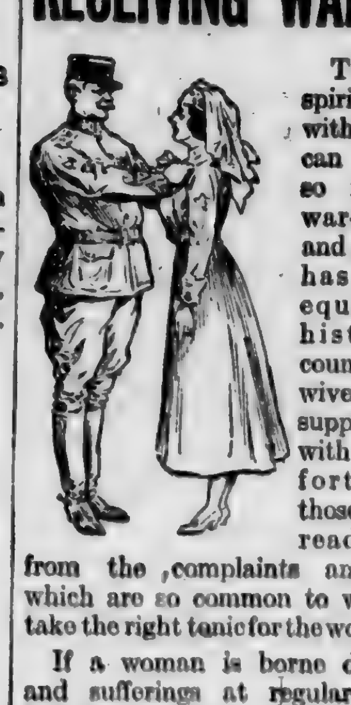
RECEIVING WAR CROSS



The patriotic spirit and devotion with which American women have so far performed war-service work and made sacrifices has never been equalled in the history of any country. Mothers, wives and sisters support this burden with strength and fortitude. But those who are already miserable from the complaints and weaknesses which are so common to women, should take the right tonic for the womanly system.

If a woman is borne down by pain and sufferings at regular or irregular intervals, by nervousness or dizzy spells, by headache or backache, "Favorite Prescription" should be taken. "Favorite Prescription" can now be had in tablet form as well as liquid at most drug stores. Send to Doctor Pierce's Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., for a ten-cent trial package of tablets.

For fifty years Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets have been most satisfactory in liver and bowel troubles.

Hamilton, Ohio.—"I can safely say that Dr. Pierce's medicines have saved my life. About ten years ago I was sick all the time, got so weak and nervous I could hardly walk around. I had woman's trouble and stomach trouble and almost everything ailed me. I thought that I would never be well again. One day I read a little book that had been thrown in the yard, and I learned about Dr. Pierce's remedies so I walked along slowly to the drug store and purchased two bottles, one of 'Favorite Prescription' and one of the 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and after taking two bottles of each I felt like a new woman."—Mrs. M. L. Stewart, 910 McGlynn St.

An International Service Built on Tiny Profits Per Pound

Some industries have been able to get in step with war demands more quickly than others.

In many cases mighty plants have sprung up—but at a prodigious cost.

The packing industry was able to adapt itself to unheard of demands more quickly, perhaps, than any other industry. And this was because the vast equipment of packing plants, refrigerator cars, branch houses, etc., had been gradually developed to its present state of efficiency, so that in the crucial hour it became a mighty international system for war service.

And how had this development taken place?

Not by making vast inroads into the capital wealth of the country, but largely by using, from year to year, a portion of the profits, to provide for expansion.

Swift & Company's profits have always been so tiny, compared with sales, that they have had practically no effect on the price of meat (amounting to only a fraction of a cent per pound).

And yet the owners of the business have been content with reasonable returns on their capital, and have been able, year after year, to put part of the profits back into the business to provide for its expansion.

These fractions of tiny profits have been repaid to to the public many fold in the form of better service, and better and cheaper meat, and made it possible for Swift & Company to meet, undaunted, the sudden cry for meat for overseas.

Could any other method of financing a vital industry involve less hardship to the people of the country? Could there be a better instance of true "profit-sharing" than this return in added usefulness and in national preparedness?

LESSON FOR DECEMBER 8

JOSEPH MADE RULER OF EGYPT.

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 41:33-44.

GOLDEN TEXT—He that is faithful in a very little is faithful also in much.—Luke 16:10.

DEVOTIONAL READING—Psalms 48.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL—Genesis 39: 41.

Thirteen long years have passed since his brethren sold him. They have been years of fiery testing for Joseph, but his faith is triumphant. There is a mighty contrast between Joseph in the pit at Dothan and Joseph as prime minister of Egypt.

I. Joseph Made Prime Minister of Egypt (vv. 38-44).

1. The Occasion (vv. 14:32).

It is the interpretation of Pharaoh's dreams. In his dreams Pharaoh saw seven fat kine coming out of the river, followed by seven lean ones, which devoured the fat ones. This dream was followed by another in which he saw seven ears of corn come up on one stalk, rank and good, only to be devoured by seven thin ones. These dreams produced uneasiness in Pharaoh's mind. Being thus troubled over them he sent for the magicians and wise men of Egypt to interpret them to him. Upon their failure to interpret them, the chief butler calls to mind the prisoner who had interpreted his dreams two years before. Pharaoh hastily brings Joseph from prison and places his dreams before him. Joseph disclaimed wisdom for himself, but confidently asserted his faith in the wisdom of God. God is pleased with those who will thus lean upon him in the crucial hour, and will never disappoint them (James 1:5). Little did Joseph's brethren, the Ishmaelites who carried him into Egypt, or Potiphar whose slave he became, realize what the future would bring to him. His years of suffering and waiting were part of God's plan for his discipline and education. It is God's law for those who would reign, that they suffer. "If we suffer, we shall also reign with him" (2 Timothy 2:12). Joseph's exaltation from the state of humility is a fine illustration of Christ's humility and exaltation (Philippians 2:9, 10).

II. Joseph's Naturalization (v. 45).

As soon as Pharaoh thus exalted him he changed his name to Zapnath-paaneah, an Egyptian word having varying designations; as "Salvation of the world," "The prince of life of the world," "The revealer of secrets," "The food of life," etc. No doubt it was Pharaoh's purpose to designate him as the preserver of life, the revealer of secrets, the interpreter of dreams, and the author of the plan by which Egypt was saved from the awful famine. He thus was naturalized, and his civil status rendered compatible with his official rank. Then Asenath, the daughter of the priest, was given him to wife. Intermarriage with this caste completed his naturalization by elevating him to social position. Joseph's elevation was to save the world from famine. Christ's elevation was to save the world from spiritual death. All unknown to his brethren, the Jews, Christ is now at the right hand of the Father, the Savior of the world from its famine of death. As Joseph received a Gentile bride in the time of his rejection and exaltation, so Christ is now receiving a Gentile bride (Romans 11:25).

III. Joseph's Wise Administration (vv. 46-49).

He first made a careful survey of the land, then organized his forces and looked after the details of the work. He did not use his power and position for himself, but to save others. He did not idle his time away, for he knew that only seven short years remained in which to work.

The Loom of Life.

It is a solemn thought that every one of us carries about with him a mystical loom, and we are always weaving—weave, weave, weave—this robe which we wear, every thought a thread of the warp, every action a thread of the weft. We weave it, and we dye it, and we cut it, and we stitch it, and then we put it on and wear it; and it sticks to us. Like a snail that crawls about your garden patches and makes its shell by a process of secretion from out of its own substance, so you and I are making that mysterious solemn thing, we call character, moment by moment. It is our own self modified by our actions. Character is the precipitate from the stream of conduct which, like the Nile delta, gradually rises solid and firm above the parent river, and confines its flow.—Alexander Maclaren.

Righteousness and Truth.

How can God fill with his own that which is already filled by man? First it must be emptied before it may be filled with the true good of righteousness and truth, of humility and love, of peace and joy.—Howard Pyle.

The Law of Life.

Pleasure, mere pleasure, is animal. God gives that to the butterfly. But progress is the law of life to the immortal. So God has arranged our life as progress, and its working principle is evolution.—Henry Drummond.

THE MAN WHO CAME BACK.

Every newspaper reader knows Walt Mason whose rippling rhymes are sent all over the country by a press syndicate. In a recent magazine article Walt has a story of a "Has-Been Who Came Back." It is his own story. He began his journalistic career at twenty-two, soon became a victim of drink, and was a down-and-outer at forty-five. Then he went to dry Kansas, began again at the bottom of the ladder and climbed to the top. This is what William Allen White, editor of the Emporia Gazette and well-known author says of him:

"When he (Walt Mason) wrote for a job on the Gazette he said that he had all the degrees that could be conferred upon him by a certain institution which claimed to cure booze-fighters, and that he had tried high resolves many times, only to wake up and find the brewer's daughter feeding his week's salary to her favorite cat. He said he wanted before he quit to try a dry town. Now Emporia is a dry town. It started dry. In 1857—that isn't a misprint for it was sixty-two years ago, in an age when a preacher could stew his soul in toddy without losing caste—Emporia in the charter of the town company started with a prohibition clause. It did not always hold the Rum Fiend away. But it always bothered him to get in. So he never waxed fat in Emporia. And for a generation Emporia, while not bone-dry, has not been moist.

"When Walt Mason came here the town was fairly dry. Alcohol formed no part of the town's conscious thought. No one invited him to drink. He heard no talk of drink; he saw no one drinking, and to get liquor he would have had to associate with loafers and plug-uglies. So Walt Mason in a dry town, having plenty of work to do, did it well. And the town stood by him and cheered him. Ten thousand people became his friends. They are his friends today."

"It is ten years," says Mr. Mason, "since I came to Emporia with my one extra shirt and my $1.35. Since prosperity overtook me I have received flattering offers from Chicago, New York, and even from London. But little old Emporia is good enough for me."

Moral—A "has-been" can come back—in a dry state.

GLAD TO BE FORCED OUT.

A Missouri saloonkeeper perhaps expressed the sentiments of his fellows fairly well when on being called to account for his violation of the law regarding the sale of liquor, he locked the door of his booze emporium and remarked: "I've quit business for good. The booze business is dead anyway, and I'm glad to be out of it." We believe this voices the feeling of the majority of the wets. The war which has forced them out of business is at the same time offering them the chance of the ages to enter and get a start in legitimate industries. One of the avowed reasons for the President's brewery closing edict was the need of men for the really essential, win-the-war enterprises, and any liquor dealer possessed of a scintilla of self-respect and desire to stand well with his fellow men will welcome this opportunity to begin anew.—Union Signal.

ENGLAND WATCHING.

On the eve of his departure for the States after taking part in the prohibition campaign in Canada, Daniel A Poling received the following significant letter from Hon. David Lloyd George, prime minister of Great Britain. There had been no previous correspondence—the letter came unsolicited:

"I am following with great interest the war restrictions on alcohol actually enforced and those under consideration in the United States.

"We have ourselves not been neglectful of the necessities imposed by war. We have stopped entirely the manufacture of spirits; we have cut down the brewing of beer by more than two-thirds and the hours during which it can be sold to less than one-third.

"Should the exigencies of war necessitate further restrictions, we shall follow with interest your campaign for the enforcement of war prohibition in the United States of America."

HARRY LAUDER AND WHISKY.

George Adams in the Association Men's News states that when Harry Lauder visited one of the camps recently some special Scotch whisky had been obtained in his honor. When he was informed of this and asked to take some, he said: "Pass me the cauld water—that is the best drink for a man who has work to do."

A LIFE SENTENCE

Jack Lait, in Hearst's Magazine, has Omaha Slim, discussing the law against whisky manufacturing, say:

"'For the period of the war' is what the law said. I call that rich. 'Period' is right. A period is what comes at the end of the sentence, ain't it? Well, this period is the end, an' the sentence is for life. Can you see us gettin' back our rights after the war? If the proud an' primeval ins'titootion couldn't stay here when it was here it's got a fine chance to get back here when it ain't here."

Back Feel Achy After Grip?

COLDS and influenza leave thousands with weak kidneys and aching backs. The kidneys have to do most of the work of fighting off a cold or a contagious disease. They weaken—slow up. Then you feel dull and draggy, irritable or nervous, and have headaches, dizzy spells, lame back, backache, sore joints and irregular kidney action. Give the kidneys quick help and avoid serious kidney troubles. Doan's Kidney Pills are always in unusual demand after grip epidemics as so many people have learned their reliability. Doan's are used the world over. They are recommended by your own friends and neighbors.

Personal Reports of Real Cases

AN INDIANA CASE.

Mrs. Chas. C. Wilson, 304 N. Oak St., Angola, Ind., says: "I suffered from pains across my back and hips and tired easily. I felt dull and languid and the kidney secretions were irregular in passage. Colds settled on my kidneys, making the trouble worse. I read of Doan's Kidney Pills and used them. They soon rid me of the backaches and put my kidneys in good condition."

AN OHIO CASE.

Geo. Land, prop. drayage business, 23 Buna Vista St., Newark, Ohio, says: "I had just recovered from an attack of grip, which left my kidneys in a weak and disordered condition. While stooping to pick up something I was seized with a sharp, shooting pain across my back that kept me in misery for several days. My kidneys were weak and I had to get up several times at night. The kidney secretions were also highly colored. I used a box of Doan's Kidney Pills. The pains in my back ceased and my kidneys got back to a normal condition."

Read a few extracts from the hundreds of unsolicited letters we receive every year, the originals of which are on file in our offices:

"I think MOTHER GRAY'S SWEET POWDERS FOR CHILDREN are grand. They were recommended to my sister by a doctor. I am giving them to my little three year old girl who was very puny, and she is picking up wonderfully."

"I received a sample of MOTHER GRAY'S SWEET POWDERS FOR CHILDREN some time ago. I tried them for both my babies and found them to be a great cure for worms. The babies like to take them and cry for more."

"I am using MOTHER GRAY'S SWEET POWDERS as directed, and have no trouble in giving them to the children as they are much nicer to take than oils or syrups. I will always keep them on hand."

"We have used MOTHER GRAY'S SWEET POWDERS FOR CHILDREN at different times for past nine years, and always found them a perfect children's medicine and very satisfactory in every case."

"I think MOTHER GRAY'S SWEET POWDERS FOR CHILDREN are the best thing I have ever used, and my little boy has not had a sick spell since I have been giving him the Powders."

Used by Mothers for over thirty years.

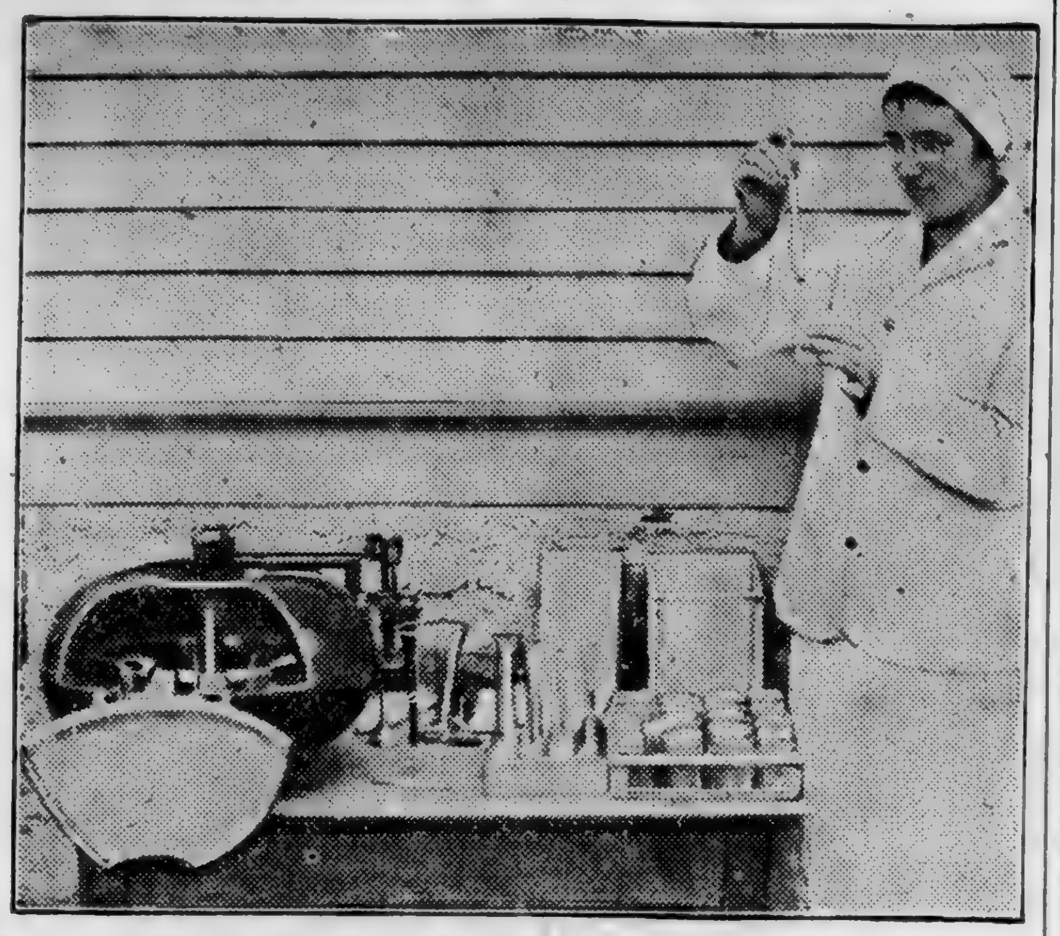
WOMEN MEET NEED FOR COW TESTERS



A Woman Cow Tester With Equipment Used in Her Work.

WOMEN WORKING AS COW TESTERS

Twenty-Seven Now Performing Work Reported by Specialists as Above Average.

IMPORTANT TASK OF DAIRY

Associations Would Increase If More Testers Were Available—Some Training That Is Easily Acquired Is Needed.

The twenty-seven women now employed as cow testers by some of the 353 cow-testing associations in this country not only have done satisfactory work, but have achieved results above the average, according to dairy specialists of the United States department of agriculture.

The main reason why women have begun to do this work is the scarcity of cow testers. Most of the testers at work when the war began were young men and many of them are now in military service. Because of the shortage of workers the past year has seen the number of cow-testing associations—organizations of farmers who want to keep records of their herds—decreased from 472 to 353, although there has been an increased demand for such associations, and it is believed the number could easily be doubled if enough testers were available. The work does not require great physical strength. It does demand some training, but this is easily acquired by women.

The first woman cow tester in the United States, Miss Bessie Lipsitz, began work less than three years ago with a cow-testing association in Grant county, Wisconsin. Wisconsin now has 18 women cow testers, Iowa six, and three other states have one each.

Demonstrates at Dairy Show.

At the national dairy show in Columbus, O., Miss Ruby Hawn, one of the women cow testers of Wisconsin, gave daily demonstrations of the tester's work that attracted considerable attention and brought much favorable comment. She explained the details of the work and demonstrated all parts of it by going through each operation precisely as she had done hundreds of times before while at work in her association in northern Wisconsin. She always had attentive audiences and proved that a woman can do the work just as well as a man. When asked if women can handle the feeding problems as well as men, she replied: "They can learn."

Women to Stay in Work.

Considering that the testers get free board and lodging, the pay is thought to be satisfactory. The women cow testers are paid the same as the men and receive from $50 to $75 a month besides board and lodging. Conveyance to the next farm is furnished in some associations, while in others the tester provides her own conveyance and the farmers furnish free stable room and feed for her horse.

The employment of women as cow testers came as a war measure. To keep the work on a satisfactory basis, women must continue to receive the same pay as the men for the same work.

How to obtain more testers is a serious problem. Partially disabled soldiers, in some cases, may be induced to take the necessary training and enlist for the work. The most radical step, however, and the one that promises the most far-reaching and immediate results, is the employment of women as cow testers.

To Make Smithfield Hams.

The hams are placed in a large tray of fine Liverpool salt, then the flesh surface is sprinkled with finely ground crude saltpeter until the hams are as white as though covered by a moderate frost—or, say, use three to four pounds of the powdered saltpeter to the thousand pounds of green hams.

After applying the saltpeter, salt immediately with the Liverpool fine salt, covering well the entire surface. Now pack the hams in bulk, but not in piles more than three feet high. In ordinary weather the hams should remain thus for three days.

Then break bulk and resalt with the fine salt. The hams thus salted and resalted should now remain in salt in bulk one day for each and every pound each ham weighs—that is, a ten-pound ham should remain ten days, and in like proportion of time for larger and smaller sizes.

Next wash with tepid water until the hams are thoroughly cleaned, and, after partially drying, rub the entire surface with finely ground black pepper.

Now the hams should be hung in the smokehouse and the important operation of smoking begun. The smoking should be done very gradually and slowly, lasting 30 to 40 days.

After the hams are cured and smoked they should be re-peppered, to guard against vermin, and then bagged. These hams improve with age and are in perfection when one year old.

FEEDING RULES

A few simple guides for feeding may be summarized as follows:

1. Under most circumstances the cow should be fed all the roughage that she will eat up clean, and the grain ration should be adjusted to the milk production.

2. A grain mixture should be fed in the proportion of one pound to each three pints or pounds of milk produced daily by the cow, except in the case of a cow producing a flow of 40 pounds or more, when the ration may be one pound to each three and a half or four pounds of milk. An even better rule is one pound of grain each day for every pound of butterfat that the cow produces during the week.

3. Feed all the cow will respond to in milk production. When she begins to put on flesh, cut down the grain.

Roots Supply Succulence.

The chief function of roots in cattle feeding is to supply a succulent feed. Under general farm conditions the quantity of nutrients grown per acre in root crops is small in comparison to the cost of production. These root crops, however, can be preserved during the winter equally well whether large or small quantities are fed each day, and therefore have special application when only a few cows are to be fed. Of the different root crops, mangel wurzels furnish the greatest yield per acre. Other kinds of beets and turnips and carrots may be used. Turnips, however, should be fed after milking rather than before, as they cause a bad flavor before milking. Carrots impart a desirable color to the milk.

Satisfy Cow's Appetite.

The problems involved in winter feeding are usually distinctly different from those of summer feeding. Pasture (or green feed), usually the basis of summer feeding, is not available. Broadly speaking, there are two factors involved in this problem, first to satisfy the needs of the cow and, second, to suit the pocketbook. The cow must have an ample supply of feed of a palatable nature, and this feed must be supplied at a price which will permit a profit on the feeding operation.

Permitting the hog to feed himself does not have the drawbacks to which such a system would be liable in the feeding of other kinds of animals, for he does not gorge himself until he becomes sick or loses his appetite.

U.S. PEACE ENVOYS

President Wilson Selects Men to Accompany Him to Conference at Paris.

HENRY WHITE AMONG THEM

Former Ambassador to France Is the Republican Representative—Naming of General Bliss Something of a Surprise.

Washington.—President Wilson on Friday made public the American delegates who accompany him to France to participate in the world peace conference. Besides the president, the American delegates are:

Secretary of State Lansing.

Henry White, formerly American ambassador to France.

Edward M. House.

Gen. Tasker H. Bliss.

White House Statement.

The names were disclosed in the following announcement from the White House:

"It was announced at the executive office that the representatives of the United States at the peace conference would be the president himself, the secretary of state, Henry White, recently ambassador to France; Edward M. House and Gen. Tasker H. Bliss.

"It was explained that it had not been possible to announce these appointments before because the number of representatives each of the chief belligerents was to send had, until a day or two ago, been under discussion."

Bliss' Name a Surprise.

The only surprise in the announcement was the selection of Gen. Tasker H. Bliss, former chief of staff of the army and now the representative of the American war department in the supreme war council of the allies.

For several days it had been generally understood that the Republican member of the delegation would be Mr. White. That Secretary Lansing and Colonel House would be the other members had been unofficially admitted.

White Long in Service.

Henry White, long in diplomatic service, was the American ambassador to France during President Roosevelt's administration. His diplomatic service began in 1883, when he served for two years as secretary to the American legation at Vienna. He was transferred to London in 1884 as second secretary of the American legation and in 1886 he was made secretary to the legation there, being recalled by President Cleveland in 1893.

During his career he also served the government in special diplomatic capacities, representing the United States at the international conference in London, 1887-88, for the abolition of sugar bounties.

He was a delegate from the United States to the international conference on agriculture at Rome in 1905, and also was the American delegate to the international conference on Moroccan affairs at Algeciras. From March, 1905, to March, 1907, Mr. White was the American ambassador to Italy, leaving that important post to become the ambassador to France, where he remained until December, 1909.

Will Parley in Berlin.

London.—Representatives of Great Britain, France and the United States will arrive in Berlin shortly to discuss the armistice, the Berlin correspondent of the Cologne-Gazette says he understands.

A meeting of the allied leaders in London will be a preliminary to the peace conference, the Daily Express says. Colonel House and Premier Orlando of Italy will be here with the British and French statesmen.

Paris.—A group of members of the chamber of deputies representing agricultural interests have sent a letter to Premier Clemenceau expressing objection to giving special representation to the socialists at the peace conference.

If that should be agreed to, however the deputies urge that the farming and peasant classes also be represented, since they had shed blood more freely than any other class.

Bavaria for Separate Peace.

London.—Bavaria probably will ask to have separate plenipotentiaries at the peace negotiations and will claim conditions of a separate peace, says the Paris Matin in commenting on the action of Bavaria in breaking off relations with the government at Berlin.

The Socialist council of Munich has telegraphed to the executive committee of the Berlin Socialist council demanding the dismissal of Dr. W. S. Solf, foreign minister; Philipp Scheidemann, minister of colonies, and Mathias Erzberger, who, it has been announced, will conduct negotiations preliminary to signing a treaty of peace.

The telegram invites the Berlin council to overthrow a government which continues such persons in important posts.

Up to the Barber.

Frances was told to take her little brother to the barber to have his hair cut. Her father gave her a quarter, saying: "I do not know whether it will cost ten or fifteen cents." Thereupon Frances skipped off to the barber.

"How do you want little Jack's hair cut?" asked the barber.

"Well you can take off ten or fifteen cents' worth," she smilingly remarked.

GOOD-BYE BACKACHE, KIDNEY AND BLADDER TROUBLES

For centuries all over the world GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil has afforded relief in thousands upon thousands of cases of lame back, lumbago, sciatica, rheumatism, gallstones, gravel and all other affections of the kidneys, liver, stomach, bladder and allied organs. It acts quickly. It does the work. It cleanses your kidneys and purifies the blood. It makes a new man, a new woman, of you. It frequently wards off attacks of the dread and fatal diseases of the kidneys. It often completely cures the distressing diseases of the organs of the body allied with the bladder and kidneys. Bloody or cloudy urine, sediment, or "brickdust" indicate an unhealthy condition.

Do not delay a minute if your back aches or you are sore across the loins or have difficulty when urinating. Go to your druggist at once and get a box of imported GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules. They are pleasant and easy to take. Each capsule contains about one dose of five drops. Take them just like you would any pill. Take a small swallow of water if you want to. They dissolve in the stomach, and the kidneys soak up the oil like a sponge does water. They thoroughly cleanse and wash out the bladder and kidneys and throw off the inflammation which is the cause of the trouble. They will quickly relieve those stiffened joints, that backache, rheumatism, lumbago, sciatica, gallstones, gravel, "brickdust," etc. They are an effective remedy for all diseases of the bladder, kidney, liver, stomach and allied organs. Your druggist will cheerfully refund your money if you are not satisfied after a few days' use. Accept only the pure, original GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules. None other genuine.—Adv.

The Tuberculosis Movement.

The war against tuberculosis is under the leadership of the National Tuberculosis Association, supported by a State Association in each State, and by local organizations scattered in all of the large cities and populous counties. There are also individual and group representatives in smaller unorganized counties.

For the support of this machinery, the Red Cross will in 1919 appropriate $2,500,000 in lieu of the usual Red Cross Seal Sale. The Red Cross Seals, while not sold this year, will be in evidence and every person who joins the Red Cross at Christmas time will be awarded ten of them to betoken his share in the fight against tuberculosis.

It has been abundantly proved that tuberculosis is preventable and curable where treatment is timely. Nov. 25, 1918

Dear Mother:—

Am very busy preparing first aid material, bandages, etc., for the trip to Atlanta, tomorrow, but thought I would send you Elgin's letter right away lest I should forget later. Just received his letter this morning.

This is some busy place now. You ought to have seen the crowd that thronged Eighteenth and Nineteenth streets and Sixth avenue last Saturday, when five-hundred patients came in. People just went wild with enthusiasm, and as our Detachment are experienced in litter drill, we helped the Hospital Detachment in unloading the patients from the ambulance. I had fifty men in my charge. Yesterday I was on the jump all day, went to Hoboken at 9 A. M., with thirty-six men to help unload patients off the "Leviathan", seven hundred all told including one hundred sixty-five litter cases. Over three hundred French officers and soldiers were passengers on the transport, also several American bankers, many millionaire Red Cross workers, army officers, Y. M. C. A. men, Salvation Army girls who had been over there, and others. It is quite a sight to see them unload this mammoth boat. I went from the top deck to the coal pit, twenty-six feet below water. It's a regular city afloat, mother. Four bands and hundreds of people accompanied the patients as far as St. Mary's hospital at Hoboken, where all patients are kept, temporarily.

The east is by far the most patriotic part of the United States, on account of seeing more or most of the troops that embark for over seas, however the south and west are good in this way, and as for the Red Cross, it is the same all over, the one unbeatable society that millions of soldiers and sailors will never forget. Even the French have already sent a mission to New York to celebrate or rather to thank the American Red Cross for the service rendered the French during the war.

Two transport loads of troops are expected here this week to demobilize and I am sorry that I may miss the sight, as New York has [illegible] for this greeting for some [illegible] it [illegible] surpasses the peace celebration. All troops will march down Fifth avenue now called the "Avenue of the Allies." I wish you could see how it is decorated from Eighth to Fifty-ninth street, it is positively wondrous to the eyes of any person.

Well mother I am a trifle tired so guess I'll quit and jump in bed. May get a furlough Christmas, but thousands of patients will be coming or will be here by that time. Write when you can.

As ever,
Paul.

DECLARE "XMAS" IS PROPER

Milwaukee (Wis.) Clergymen Say Abbreviation Has Origin in Greek Spelling of "Christ."

Use of the word Xmas in abbreviation of Christmas is not irreverent or sacrilegious, but is of ancient and classical origin.

"This was the consensus of opinion expressed by representative clergy of a number of denominations throughout the city, says the Milwaukee Sentinel.

The letter "X" as used in connection with the word Xmas to express Christmas is the first letter in the Greek name for Christ, which in English letters is spelled "Xristos," explained Rev. Herbert C. Noonan, S. J., president of Marquette university. "Because of this, the letter "X" long has been a symbol for Christ and has been used as such for generations since the Christian era.

"An illustration of the common use of the term is the custom, still prevalent among some [illegible], of [illegible] letters 'Yours in Xto,' in this case the 'to' following the letter being the Latin ending of the name of Christ."

A similar opinion was expressed by Rev. R. S. Donaldson, pastor of Persellsmore Presbyterian church.

"I know many [illegible] who use [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] to the [illegible]," declared Rev. E. Reginald Williams, [illegible]

[illegible] tabernacle, [illegible] did not consider the term irreverent, [illegible] the use of [illegible] word.

An' do my sums,
An' clean the [illegible] 'thout waitin' to be told—
Though I like sleddin' better, as a rule,
Or buildin' forts— But nothin' ain't so bad,

My cooky to the baby, an' take care
About the crumbs.
It's fun to make the little fellow laugh,
An' I don't mind his [illegible] ev'rywhere,
He can't help bein' little! I'm not mad
When Christmas comes.

When Christmas comes, I don't forget to give
My shoes a wipe, an' scrub my ears a lot
Till my head hums.
An' mother says, "That boy's too good to live!"
But I'm not 'fraid of dyin', 'cause I a shot
So different from always—only glad
When Christmas comes!

Christmas Bells.

There are some festivals, like birthdays, for example, which affect a single family; others, like national holidays, embrace the nation; and some there are which girdle the entire globe. But Christmas Day lifts at one leap a line of connection between earth and heaven. If there be one day on earth on which above another the gates of heaven are more widely opened, it is the day when joy-bells ring in memory of the birth of the Babe of Bethlehem. This is the day of the Christmas bells.—Bishop Vincent.

No Apology Needed.

Never apologize for a Christmas gift. Never say it is cheaper than what you would have liked to give, or not as pretty as you thought it, or anything of the sort. A Christmas gift is supposed to be an expression of good will. If there is kindness enough back of the giving, no apology is necessary.

The Bootblack's Christmas

The balsam fir is the source, too, of the wood from which are made many of the food containers, such as fruit baskets and butter boxes, in which materials for the Christmas dinner are brought to the market, the tastelessness of the wood making it unsurpassed for such uses. Finally, the balsam fir is being increasingly used for the manufacture of paper, and this, wrapped around thousands of holiday packages, adds still another chapter to the list of the tree's almost indispensable usefulness as a factor in Christmas observances.

If We Give Ourselves.

Christmas is not a day or a season, but a condition of heart and mind. If we love our neighbors as ourselves; if in our riches we are poor in spirit and in our poverty we are rich in grace; if our charity vaunteth not itself, but suffereth and is kind; if when our brother asks a loaf we give ourselves instead; if each day dawns in opportunity and sets in achievement however small; then every day is Christ's day and Christmas is always near.

Day of All Days.

Merry Christmas! may it find you

—Tennyson.

Maybe—And Maybe Not

The maid was very fair to see,
But staid, and not inclined to folly.
She stood behind the Christmas tree
And gravely hung a wreath of holly.
Himself passed there, by chance, and saw
Her all alone, and straightway lingered;
And she, who had been tranquil—pshaw!
Became at once most butter-fingered!
The mistletoe hung overhead;
(I think I said the maid was fair?)
Her eyes were bright, her lips were red,
And sunbeams glistened in her hair.
The tree was large, the two were hid—
He turned and left her?—Yes, he did!

The maid was very wroth. Oh, dear,
She ran away with cheeks a-flaming
'Twixt anger and a touch of fear,
The scarlet of the holly shaming.
She told her dearest friend, I've heard,
So, shortly, everybody knew it;
The place whereat the deed occurred
Was near, and maidens flocked to view it.
Himself was there, engulfed in gloom,
(And he was also good to see.)
The mistletoe its waxen bloom
Still flaunted for those maids to see;
And so they each one ran and hid,
And scorned to tarry?—Yes, they did!
—Beatrice Barry, in New York Times.

Letting the Neighbors See It.

"Mr. Glithery gave Mrs. Glithery a pearl necklace for a Christmas present," remarked Mr. Twobble.

"I've heard about it," answered Mrs. Twobble. "And if it wasn't for the risk, I dare say she'd hang it in a front window of their apartment instead of a holly wreath."

Merely a Pose.

"Those pretty girls who stand beneath the mistletoe pretend they don't know where they are."

"Umph!" replied the heartless cynic. "They'd know in a jiffy if some fellow came along with a harelip."

There are about 4200 members in the two district, comprised of all lodges in the 12th. congressional district and fully one thousand visitors are expected in attendance, including all the Grand Lodge officers.

Will Filed With Clerk.

The will of the late Electa J. Ryan, who died at St. Joe, November 28, has been filed for probate in the office of County Clerk W. W. Mountz.

The will was made October 29, 1612. To her brother, Henry J. Herrick, the testator gave for use during his life all her real estate, together with all buildings and improvements, as well as all personal property, including household goods, money and certificates.

Subject to the life estate of her brother, the deceased bequeaths the property to the children of her deceased brother, George W. Herrick. These children are Lott R. Herrick, Lyle G. Herrick, G Wirt Herrick and Wayne D. Herrick, of Farmer City, Ill., Dwight O. Herrick of Laramie, Wyo., and Hope Herrick Henry of Louisville, Ky.

A clause of the will says: "I have not by this will devised or bequeathed any of my property to the children or descendants of my deceased brothers and sisters other than to the children of my deceased brother, George W. Herrick, but this will is made by me after long and careful deliberation and is in accordance with my wishes, and I have not given by this will any of my property to any of my relatives other than my said brother, Henry J. Herrick, and the children of my deceased brother, George W. Herrick, above named, for reasons which to me seem adequate and sufficient."

The testator nominated Henry J. Herrick as executor of the will. Witnesses to the signing of the will were Robertson Nicholls and Preston Roberts.

The real estate is valued at $17,000 and Henry J. Herrick gave $100 bond as executor of the will, with Preston Roberts as security.

Among Our Sick.

Blanche Leighty was quite sick, Saturday and Sunday.

F. M. Monroe is still unable to leave the house because of rheumatism.

F. M. Thornton, operator at the tower, is sick in bed, supposed to be suffering from the "Flu" as the report has it.

St. Joe has a number of sick folks at the present time, all of which are improving, and none of them are serious.

The three children of John Hart and wife, of the west part of town, are recovering from their terrible sickness caused from poisoning, and are now able to be up and eat some.

The editor and wife are sick so if the paper doesn't suit you just blame Miss Leighty and L. W. Yeiser. We've done our best on short notice.

Clark Is on Way Home

Many rumors have been current within the past month regarding the nature and severity of Clark Scholes' wounds. It has been reported that both legs were shot off; that he is totally blind; that he was seriously wounded and gangrene had followed; and others, no doubt, that the NEWS has not heard, all of them without foundation.

The nature of the wound is not known even by young Scholes' parents, and they would be the first to learn it. That he is severely injured, they know: word to that effect was received by them on the 4th inst. in a telegram from the government. He was wounded in action on Oct. 25. That is all the information the message contains. From letters received from Clark himself, it is learned that he is getting better daily; that he is able to be up and walk around a short time each day.

LATER:—Mrs. Scholes received a letter from Clark, Wednesday morning of this week, stating that he had a fracture of the shoulder and arm. The communication was written on Nov. 19 and said that he expected to leave for the U. S. within a week. This will set at rest all exaggreated reports and his many friends will be looking for his early arrival in our midst.

THE MAKING OF A FAMOUS MEDICINE

How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Is Prepared For Woman's Use.

A visit to the laboratory where this successful remedy is made impresses even the casual looker-on with the reliability, accuracy, skill and cleanliness which attends the making of this great medicine for woman's ills.

Over 350,000 pounds of various herbs are used anually and all have to be gathered at the season of the year when their natural juices and medicinal substances are at their best.

The most successful solvents are used to extract the medicinal properties from these herbs.

Every utensil and tank that comes in contact with the medicine is sterilized and as a final precaution in cleanliness the medicine is pasteurized and sealed in sterile bottles.

It is the wonderful combination of roots and herbs, together with the skill and care used in its preparation which has made this famous medicine so successful in the treatment of female ills.

The letters from women who have been restored to health by the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound which we are continually publishing attest to its virtue.

Woman Had No Occasion to Smile, and Wouldn't Do It to Please Photographer.

The village photographer was losing patience with his lady patron. "Just a little smile, please," he said, dwelling somewhat on the last word. "A smile adds so much to the artistic effect."

The lady shook her head.

"Of course, if you'd rather—" commenced the artist.

"I would that," came from the direction of the head rest. "Our one layin' hen died this mornin', bacon's gone up tuppence a pound, mother's had a couple of fits, my boy George has just broke a plate glass window, and my husband is in a military hospital with four or five pounds o' lead inside him. FOR WEAR AFTER LIGHTS ARE ON

House Gowns Are Adopted by the Conservative, Thus Saving Other Clothes.

VIVID COLORS ARE IN FAVOR

Black Velvet With Cream Lace, a Fashionable Outfit for Formal Occasions—High Neck and the Evening Wardrobe.

New York.—The kind and quality of street clothing has been well established since the first of October, even though fashions, newer than September ones, infiltrate through positions strongly held. For house costumes, however, there is no well-defined line of action, writes a leading fashion authority.

A European once sair that American women were divided into two classes: those who changed their costumes for dinner and those who did not. He might have added that the divisions also existed between those who had dinner in the day and those who had it at night. It is difficult to make a European take this statement seriously, for he cannot imagine a civilized spot in the world where folk sit down to heavy courses of red meat, vegetables, and dessert in the early afternoon.

The American world is getting along though in the cosmopolitan idea of having its most substantial meal after the activities of the day are over in order that comfortable digestion may take a leisurely course and the mind be allowed to rest from its labors.

We are learning that a full stomach and a keen brain do not go together and when our millions of soldiers return from a land where dinner is an established pleasure of the evening the homes of the country will probably change the dinner hour without realizing that it is overturning a simon pure Americanism.

Dressing for Dinner.

Whether or not the division between those who dress for dinner and those who do not, will be closed up, must be left to chance. It is a custom that grows with wealth and social surroundings. It is not so much the choice of the individual as the set in which one moves.

Women are like sheep, in that they do whatever their friends do, as a rule, and follow the established rules of the herd. It is primal reasoning, or instinct, this, and few people break away from the accepted and uncriticized customs of that particular mass of which they are units.

In some of the most cultured communities it is the habit, for instance, to make a fresh toilet in the late afternoon, one which serves for the late dinner or supper that follows and these very people may, and usually do, get into gayer and more formal clothes for some evening entertainment that begins late. They keep their decollete clothes for the public and not for their own family.

Among that great and increasing mass who spend their eating hours in public restaurants, not because they prefer eating in mass, but because they live in buildings connected with these communal eating rooms as the easiest way out of the servant problem, the pressure to dress for dinner is too strong to be resisted, but a special kind of costume has been invented for this hour growing up out of the situation. It is the whole balance of demand and supply which governs progress.

And there has come about over here still another fashion, the revival of an old one, which is the use of an elaborate tea gown for those hours given over to the family and, possibly, a few intimates, in the evening. This, too, saves the more formal evening clothes and it spares the street gown.

There lies the crux of the situation: to spare the better class of clothes.

New and Colorful Tea Gowns.

When a fashion gets good headway, variety in design and ingenuity keep it rolling. Now that the women with their seamstresses follow the dressmakers in achieving cleverness in these tea gowns that have nothing in common with wrappers the fashion is well established and new glories remodeled from past glory is quite the boast of the average woman. To achieve something colorful and clever in this line is woman's favorite indoor sport this season. As the winter advances the costumes take on more brilliancy and depth and velvet is constantly used, if not as an entire robe then as a voluminous coat that keeps one warm.

Many of these long coats are as vivid as those worn by the Slavs and metal is lavishly used. The foundation robe is of chiffon over taffeta or satin and several colors throughout. One of the foolish fashions is to follow the French trick of cutting the sleeves short, leaving the arms exposed. No one knows why Paris found herself disposed to try out anything as foolish as this during a time when coal is difficult to get and leather for gloves almost prohibitive. Don't adopt it. Cut sleeves long.

When One Leaves the House.

All tea gowns are not after these elaborate designs, however, so the woman who could and would not wear such costumes at her table and in the sitting room, can find plenty of admirable ideas for the reconstructing of ancient and honorable dance clothes into more demure house gowns. The idea is rampant. It is left to the individual to work it out according to her purse, inclination, environment.

Reaction Always Follows.

This is natural. Anyone who will read the past as a means of appreciating and understanding the present and immediate future will learn much that otherwise will seem new and unprecedented. All periods of depression and repression have been followed by a joyous reaction in women's apparel, and often in men's clothes as well. It was the tremendous swing of the pendulum away from the rigid sway and reign of death and privation of Cromwell's domination over Great Britain that brought about the excesses in apparel for which the reign of Charles II was conspicuous.

As one clothes historian tells us, it was the saving of material and all other extravagances during Cromwell's era that amassed the fortunes that went toward the utmost follies in clothes during the restoration. It may be that we will see the same sort of reaction. It happened in Paris after the allies finally defeated Napoleon, and the duke of Wellington, with his colleagues, occupied Paris. Those were exciting days of pleasure, Lady Shelly says in her letters, and women of all countries went into the greatest excesses in clothes and gayety. So it is better to be warned by history as to what to expect.

Next to it is shown a house gown built from a long straight strip of golden-brown satin embroidered with dull gold thread. Over this is thrown a tunic edged with brown fur.

The KITCHEN CABINET

The scales of household polity are the scales of love, and she who balances them evenly is indeed wise.

WAYS WITH CHESTNUTS.

This delicately flavored nut is highly valued, and where it is found in abundance adds many tasty dishes to the menu.

Mashed Chestnuts.—This dish, if served for a luncheon or supper dish with sliced cold meat, takes the place of potatoes and gives us a new dish. Shell and blanch the nuts, then cook them in milk until tender. Mash and season with salt, butter and paprika.

A half-cupful of mashed chestnuts spread over a custard pie before the meringue is placed, or on a lemon pie, makes a most unusual and delicious addition.

Chestnut Custard.—Blanch, boil and mash through a ricer a quantity of chestnuts. To one cupful of the pulp add three egg yolks and one beaten white, one cupful of milk, half a teaspoonful of vanilla extract and sugar to sweeten. Pour into a buttered dish and bake slowly. Make a meringue with the other two whites, with two tablespoonfuls of sugar, and brown in the oven.

Curried Chestnuts.—Shell and blanch one pound of chestnuts; stew in chicken stock until tender. Take two tablespoonfuls of olive oil, or if that is not at hand use corn oil. Add a teaspoonful of sugar, a sliced onion, one chopped apple, a tablespoonful of curry and a tablespoonful of sweet chutney; moisten with a cupful of stock or gravy and cook until the apple is soft, then rub through a sieve, add a squeeze of lemon juice and simmer until the nuts have absorbed the flavor. Serve with plain boiled rice.

Chestnut Sauce for Turkey.—Add two tablespoonfuls of flour to three tablespoonfuls of the fat from the roasting pan of the turkey. Add two cupfuls of boiling water and stir until smooth and thick. Season with salt, pepper, and add a pint of mashed cooked chestnuts, a tablespoonful of chili sauce or a few drops of Tabasco. Pour into a sauce boat and serve with the turkey.

Glaced chestnuts are a well-liked sweet. Boil sugar and a little water until it cracks when dropped in water; dip the blanched nuts quickly in the sirup and place on greased plates to cool.

* * *

If a man finds himself with bread in both hands, he should exchange one loaf for some flowers of the narcissus, since the loaf feeds the body indeed, but the flowers feed the soul.—Mahomet.

FOOD FOR SPECIAL OCCASIONS.

Fortunately we are not all alike in our tastes. Foods of which one is especially fond will not be at all acceptable to his neighbor. This diversity of tastes gives us many dishes, and he is indeed hard to suit who cannot find some to his liking.

Royal Sandwiches.—Mix a half-cupful of almonds, season with salt and red pepper, add two tablespoonfuls of chopped pickles, one tablespoonful of worcestershire sauce and one tablespoonful of chutney. Spread the bread with cream cheese, and sprinkle with the almond mixture, finely chopped. Salted crackers may be used in place of bread.

Windsor Sandwiches.—Cream a cupful of chopped ham with two-thirds of a cupful of chopped chicken; when well blended season with paprika, salt and spread on buttered white bread.

Cheese and Pepper Sandwiches.—Mash a small cream cheese, season well, add enough thick cream to make of the right consistency. Season with red pepper and salt, add a finely shredded green pepper, mix well and spread on buttered rounds of white bread.

Olive Sandwiches.—Chop fine and pound to a pulp a dozen olives and a half-cupful of crisp celery. Add an eighth of a teaspoonful of made mustard, one teaspoonful of catsup, two tablespoonfuls of cracker crumbs rubbed very fine and a cupful of mayonnaise.

Stuffed Baked Apples.—Core good-sized apples and fill the centers with raisins, sugar, cinnamon and bits of butter. Baste with water during the baking.

The tender hearts of celery, if surrounded by chipped ice and served, make a most delicious accompaniment to the meat course.

Orange Meringue.—Cook together a pint of boiling water and a tablespoonful of corn starch which has been mixed with cold water. Add the juice of two lemons, the whites of three eggs and three oranges sliced. Cook the water and cornstarch with four tablespoonfuls of sugar ten minutes, then add the fruit juice. Pour this over the oranges while hot. Cover with a meringue made from the whites of the eggs and three tablespoonfuls of sugar.

For the year of peace and plenty,
And for blessings without end,
Let the voices of the people
In Thanksgiving praises blend.

THANKSGIVING DISHES.

Something new or untried is always welcome for the great national Thanksgiving day.

Baked hubbard squash served as an escalloped dish is not a common way of treating the time-honored dish, yet it is very good for a change.

Dainty little pumpkin pies baked in patty tins are great favorites with the small people, and for the older people they may be heaped with whipped cream and sprinkled with finely grated snappy cheese.

Parisian Apples.—Peel the apples and cut them into small balls with a potato cutter. Put to cook in a rich sirup flavored with lemon juice and rind, and cooked with the bright peelings of the apples for color. When tender, cool and serve in sherbet glasses with the juice poured over them and a spoonful of sweetened whipped cream for a garnish. This dish, served with plain boiled rice, is a very wholesome dessert for children.

Chestnut Soup.—Peel a quart of large chestnuts and boil in salted water; remove the brown peeling and chop fine. Add a teaspoonful each of salt and sugar, the rind of a lemon and a quart of water. Bring to a boil and cook slowly for an hour. Rub through a sieve, add two quarts of chicken or veal stock, a teaspoonful of parsley finely minced, a tablespoonful of flour and a tablespoonful of butter well blended. Season with red pepper and simmer twenty minutes, stirring until well blended. Put through a sieve and serve. A yolk of egg added to the soup just before serving adds both nourishment and slight thickening.

Chestnut Stuffing.—Chestnuts as a stuffing for fowl are a great delicacy. Boil and mash and season well with butter, salt, pepper, and add bread crumbs to make sufficient filling. Other seasonings, such as sage and onion, may be added if liked. Cooking the nuts in a well-seasoned broth will also add much to the flavor of the stuffing.

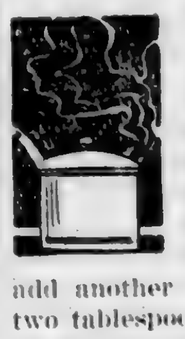
What's the use of being in the knocker's section of the anvil chorus, when the builders' committee of the booster club is right next door waiting for you?

INVITING DISHES.

A hot soup at this season of the year will be found most acceptable either noon or night.



Creole Soup.—Add to a small diced turnip and carrot a large onion, two cupfuls of boiling water, a tablespoonful of rice and a cupful of tomato puree. Cook until tender, rub through a sieve, add another cupful of boiling water two tablespoonfuls of fat, a teaspoonful of salt and a cupful of green peas. Reheat and serve hot.

Delicious Omelet.—Break four eggs into a bowl and beat just enough to blend the yolks and whites. Add salt and put two tablespoonfuls of butter substitute into an omelet pan and set on the back part of the stove; gently move the pan from side to side to allow each portion to run down next to the pan until the whole is of creamy consistency. Then fold and turn on a hot platter.

Hot Tamales.—Boil a fowl until tender, strip the meat from the bones and chop fine. Chop half a pound of seeded raisins and a half cupful of stoned olives with one small red pepper, also finely chopped. Mix all together and stir to a paste with two cupfuls of cornmeal, moisten with scalding water and stir over the fire, cooking fifteen minutes. Add six hard-cooked eggs finely chopped and mold into a long roll; place in the smooth inner husks of green corn, or the dried husks may be used; tie with strips of the husk and boil for an hour in water.

Coffee Junket.—Steep a tablespoonful of coffee in a half cupful of milk, strain and add when cool to a cupful and a half of milk warmed to the luke-warm stage and a half tablet of junket which has been dissolved in a tablespoonsful of cold water; stir until well-mixed, add sugar to taste and pour into glass sherbet cups. When thick remove from the warm room and place on ice. Serve topped with a spoonful of whipped sweetened cream.

Young Carrots.—Place the scraped carrots in a saucepan with a small onion, a bay leaf, a little salt and pepper. Cover with stock and stew until tender. Serve on a hot dish surrounded with seasoned mashed potatoes.

Deviled Ham.—Chop fine one pint of boiled ham, a large part fat; add six hard-cooked eggs, one teaspoonful of mustard, the prepared kind. Mix and press into a mold. This will keep for weeks, and makes a fine sandwich filling.

GIRLS! LOTS OF BEAUTIFUL HAIR

A small bottle of "Danderine" makes hair thick, glossy and wavy.

Removes all dandruff, stops itching scalp and falling hair.

To be possessed of a head of heavy, beautiful hair; soft, lustrous, fluffy, wavy and free from dandruff is merely a matter of using a little Danderine.

It is easy and inexpensive to have nice, soft hair and lots of it. Just get a small bottle of Knowlton's Danderine now—it costs but a few cents—all drug stores recommend it—apply a little as directed and within ten minutes there will be an appearance of abundance, freshness, fluffiness and an incomparable gloss and lustre, and try as you will you cannot find a trace of dandruff or falling hair; but your real surprise will be after about two weeks' use, when you will see new hair—fine and downy at first—yes—but really new hair—sprouting out all over your scalp—Danderine is, we believe, the only sure hair grower, destroyer of dandruff and cure for itchy scalp, and it never fails to stop falling hair at once.

If you want to prove how pretty and soft your hair really is, moisten a cloth with a little Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair—taking one small strand at a time. Your hair will be soft, glossy and beautiful in just a few moments—a delightful surprise awaits everyone who tries this. Adv.

Colonel Properly Rebuked.

A truck train was lined up on a dark road running parallel with the front and only a few kilometers back, while a company of pioneers mended a broken culvert.

A colonel, who was unfortunate enough to be at the rear end of the jam and who was quite anxious to be on the move, turned on the electric lights of his limousine in hopes that the light would enable the men toiling on the roads to work faster.

A pioneer private passed, pick above his head, when he saw the sudden flare of light.

"Hey, you rube!" he shouted. "What are you trying to pull off down there? Do you want all the German artillery in the country turned on us? Can that stuff or I'll come down and kick a lung out just to pass the time."

There was no reply. But the light went out.—Stars and Stripes.

INDIANA STATE NEWS

Indianapolis.—"We expect that influenza-pneumonia will be with us all winter," said Dr. J. N. Hurty, secretary of the state board. "Normally, we may expect 133 deaths in the state from the disease in January. That has been the average for the last ten years." At the state office it was expected that the epidemic in Indiana may begin to subside within a short time. The epidemic has had the state in its grip for two months. Forty-six counties reported 2,710 new cases to the board. This is an average of a fraction more than 58 new cases to the county, but the number represents, in some instances, accumulated reports. Vigo county reported 296 new cases for two days; Rush county, 236; Johnson county, 172; Noble county, 136; Decatur county, 134; Laporte county, 117; Elkhart county, 110; Lagrange county, 100; Wells county, 96, and Cass county, 94. Others reported fewer cases.

Indianapolis.—In October, 1917, the Jasper County Better Farming association promoted and organized a boys' pure-bred Shorthorn club. Forty registered heifers were purchased by the First National bank of Rensselaer and placed with members of the club. Previous to this time there were but six herds of registered Shorthorns in Jasper county. During the last year, ten of the club members' parents purchased 34 head of registered Shorthorns, and 14 new breeders, exclusive of these parents, have entered the business by purchasing a total of 54 animals. It can be said authoritatively that following the formation of the clubs, a total of 46 new herds of Shorthorn cattle were established in Jasper county, contracted with the six herds that had existed up to that time.

Evansville.—Before adjournment of the twelfth annual convention of the Southwestern Indiana Teachers' association, G. W. Behrens of Mount Vernon, superintendent of the school of Posey county, was elected president of the association for the ensuing year. Other officers were chosen as follows: Vice president, R. E. Eckert of Jasper; secretary, Miss Margaret Wilson of Jasper; treasurer, John C. Chewning of Evansville; executive committee, J. E. Johnson of Winslow, Floyd Ragland of Evansville, W. F. Vogel of Boonville, Charles E. Skinner of Rockport, and H. S. Yeager of Owensville. It was voted to hold the next convention in Evansville on the two days following Thanksgiving in 1919.

Indianapolis.—In overruling demurrers to indictments against men charged with violation of the liquor laws, Judge A. B. Anderson, in federal court, ruled that it is unlawful to bring liquor into Indiana by train, automobile, on person, by wagon, or airship. Judge Anderson also ruled that the proviso of the Redd amendment of the Webb-Kenyon act under which the indictments were drawn providing that the postmaster general publish lists of states wherein were laws prohibiting the soliciting of liquor sales by newspaper or magazine advertising, or through the mails, did not apply to states wherein were laws making shipments of liquor into the state unlawful.

Indianapolis.—As a result of the activity of County Agent Clarke A. Richards of Jennings county, 46 limestone crushers have been placed in that county within the last year and the vast deposits of limestone there are being ground and spread over the land to correct acid soil. More than 50,000 tons of crushed stone has been used on the farms there this year, which will result in a great increase in crop production and much larger profits for the farmers who have used it. Liming work is being made a major project by better farming associations and farmers' organizations in many counties of Indiana, especially in the southern half.

Indianapolis.—Indiana is to have a war history, which probably will include not alone the magnificent record of the state as a whole, but which will make into permanent record for posterity the war activities of each of the 92 counties. Governor Goodrich announced that he will confer with Harlow Lindley of Richmond, secretary of the Indiana state historical commission, regarding the final plans for development of such a state history.

Shelbyville.—Rot in corn and wheat scab are caused by minute organisms which are closely related, according to a report made by Prof. G. N. Hoffer of Purdue university, Lafayette, after experiments which were conducted on several Shelby county corn and wheat fields during the summer months. The report was filed in conjuction with Prof. A. G. Johnson of the University of Wisconsin, formerly of Purdue, and D. Atanasoff.

Indianapolis.—The total of united war work subscriptions in Indiana was $5,693,789.20, according to the bulletin board at state headquarters.

Frankfort.—Clinton county is proud of its war record. In every campaign it has proved 100 per cent patriotic. During the 20 months the United States was at war, nearly 800 of the boys of this county entered the service and the names of 45 of them appeared on the nation's honor roll. Twenty-seven deaths resulted either in France or in the army camps in this country, and 18 were reported wounded or gassed.

Indianapolis.—Loose smut, which reduced the wheat yield of Shelby county more than 100,000 bushels this year, meaning a loss of more than $200,000 to the farmers, will be wiped out within two or three years in that county as a result of the work of County Agent R. G. East, and the Shelby County Better Farming association in treating seed to obtain a strain of pure, disease free seed. A central treating station was established and 200 bushels of seed were treated this fall by the hot-water method. This was distributed among 40 farmers. Next year the entire lot of wheat from the 40 treated plots will be sold as seed to other farmers in the county, and they in turn will sell their disease free seed to others, while the treating work will be done next fall on a much more extensive scale. In the course of perhaps three years, this disease will have been eradicated and the average yield of wheat in the county will be increased about two bushels per acre. As they grow wheat on 60,000 acres, this will mean an increase of 120,000 bushels which at present prices will add over $250,000 to the value of the crop.

Indianapolis.—Indiana is in the midst of its most intense effort to avoid failure in a war financing campaign, says an announcement made here by officials of the War Savings stamps campaign. 'Between now and January 1 the people of the state must rally again to the financial colors if they are to keep the Hoosier war record at 100 per cent. With a quota of $58,000,000 for the current year, Indiana thus far actually has taken and paid for only $46,000,000 in War Savings stamps. Perhaps $10,000,000 additional has been pledged, but in many instances the pledges apparently will not be redeemed and it will be necessary therefore to resell these pledges. Even with this $10,000,000 in stamps resold, the state must sell more than $2,000,000 additional, if it reaches the goal set for it by the government.

Indianapolis. — Governor Goodrich, as commander in chief of the Liberty Guards of Indiana, issued an order mustering the organization out of service. The governor extended formal thanks to the guard for the splendid wor which it accomplished during the war. [illegible] than 30,000 Hoosiers were enrolled in the organization. It had 212 companies. More than 8,000 of the guardsmen entered the army later with the advantage of its preliminary preparation. Harry B. Smith, adjutant general of Indiana, was the governor's staff adjutant in the guard, but owing to lack of time delegated most of his work in this particular to George S. Harney, secretary of the military affairs committee of the state council of defense.

Indianapolis.—An egg famine is a probability if the winter is severe, dealers of this city say. With only about a week's supply of storage eggs in Indianapolis and cold weather preventing pullets from laying in quantity, dealers say the price of eggs may advance to 80 cents and, one dealer predicts, to $1. According to government estimates the supply of storage eggs throughout the country will be exhausted by December 20, if consumption continues at the October and November rate. Indianapolis dealers say it is impossible to obtain any more from the large markets, for stocks there have been sold.

Indianapolis.—The state council of defense in called session, directed the closing of its general activities. The organization is to be maintained intact, however, with M. E. Foley, chairman, in the office each Saturday, and John V. Wilson, secretary, in the office each day until Governor Goodrich dissolves it by proclamation. The council directed Chairman Foley to send out letters directing each of the chairmen of the county defense councils to set their affairs in order, but that it is desired for the present to hold their organizations intact.

Newcastle.—Residents of Newcastle presented a silver service to Maj. Gen. Omar Bundy, United States army, who returned to his old home city here for a visit, after winning fame as commander of the Fifth corps in the American expeditionary forces in France. An inscription on the service reads: "In loving tribute from the friends and neighbors of Newcastle and Henry county, Indiana, December 3, 1918, to Maj. Gen. Omar Bundy for his gallant services while in command of American troops in France."

Frankfort.—Clinton county saved practically $1,000 on the election held November 5 over the elections held in past years according to the figures now available. By use of voting machines the number of voting precincts was reduced from 43 to 20 and the amount saved on the boards this year over 1916 was $1,653.43.

Evansville.—Mr. and Mrs. Israel Brenner of this city have just completed a 35,000-mile automobile tour of the United States that required two years. They visited every state capital and every army cantonment in states that have cantonments and met Evansville soldiers in almost every one.

Jeffersonville—One measure that will come before the legislature in which the women of the state are greatly interested, is a bill to stop the reckless marriages that are performed at Jeffersonville and Crown Point. The women's clubs and organizations have been making an investigation of the conditions prevailing here, and in Crown Point, as regards marriages and they have arrived at the conclusion that in many instances the marriages are simply a jest and a mockery of words and for that reason they will ask that the system be abolished.

LENROOT AND CHILD LABOR

© HARRIS & EWING

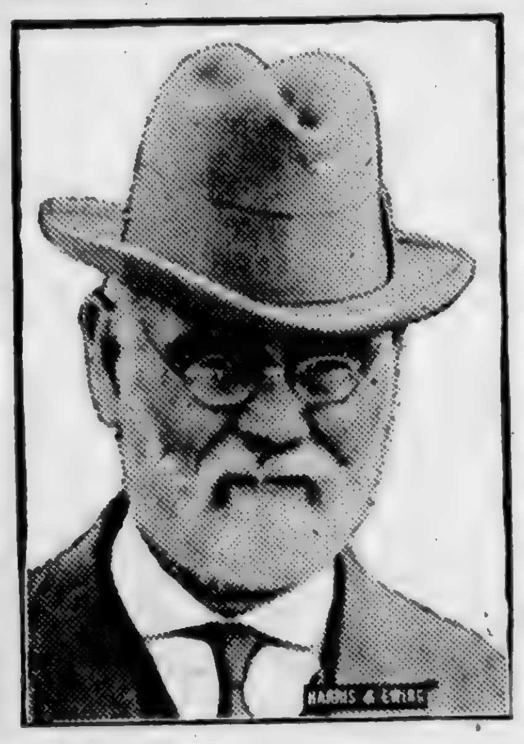
"The employment of children in premature labor is an assault on the foundations of society," say the sociologists. They point out that wartime conditions have enormously increased juvenile delinquency through violations of child labor and compulsory education laws. They say:

"It is difficult to measure the sacrifice that the relaxing of child welfare regulations has already meant in terms of human welfare and happiness. We can only guess as yet what the price may be that we shall have to pay. But certain facts make it quite clear that if we wish to preserve our national treasure—the children—we must increase rather than lower our regulations; give greater protection instead of less; take more children out of industry rather than put more children in."

Senator Lenroot of Wisconsin, with Senators Kenyon and Pomerene, has drawn a bill to avoid the constitutional defects which defeated the former child labor act. It makes use of the taxing power, proposing a prohibitive excise tax on all products of child labor, the tax to be additional to all other taxation.

Irvine L. Lenroot has been in congress since 1909. Up to last summer he was in the house. Now he is in the senate, having been elected at a special election to fill a vacancy caused by death. He made his mark in the house.

JAMES R. MANN—NEXT SPEAKER?



The election of November 5 changed the political complexion of congress. When the members-elect take their seats March 4 next the Republicans will control both houses.

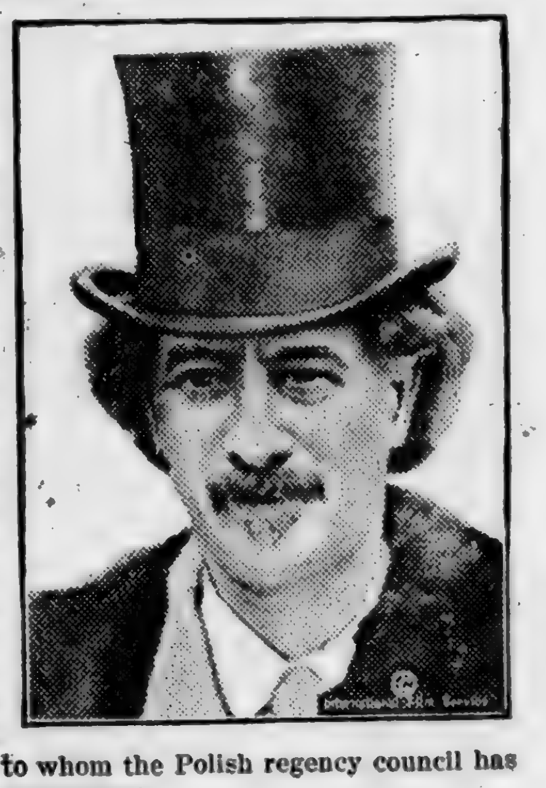
When the Republicans organize the house, who will be elected speaker to succeed Champ Clark? The West thinks James R. Mann of Illinois is the man. The East picks Frederick H. Gillett of Massachusetts. Nicholas Longworth of Ohio is considered the dark horse.

Mann represents one of the most important districts in the whole country—several South side wards of Chicago. He is an old-timer, having served ten successive terms. Gillett is even more of an old-timer, having served 12 terms.

In picking Gillett the East eliminates Mann after this fashion: "It is now generally accepted that Mann, the nominal Republican floor leader and logical candidate for speaker, will, by reason of his long illness, be passed over."

But Mann appeared in Washington the other day, declared he was fit and looked it, and announced that only the unanimous verdict of his physicians would keep him from being a candidate. Then he went straight to Johns Hopkins hospital, Baltimore, for an examination and the verdict.

POLAND'S FIRST PRESIDENT—IF



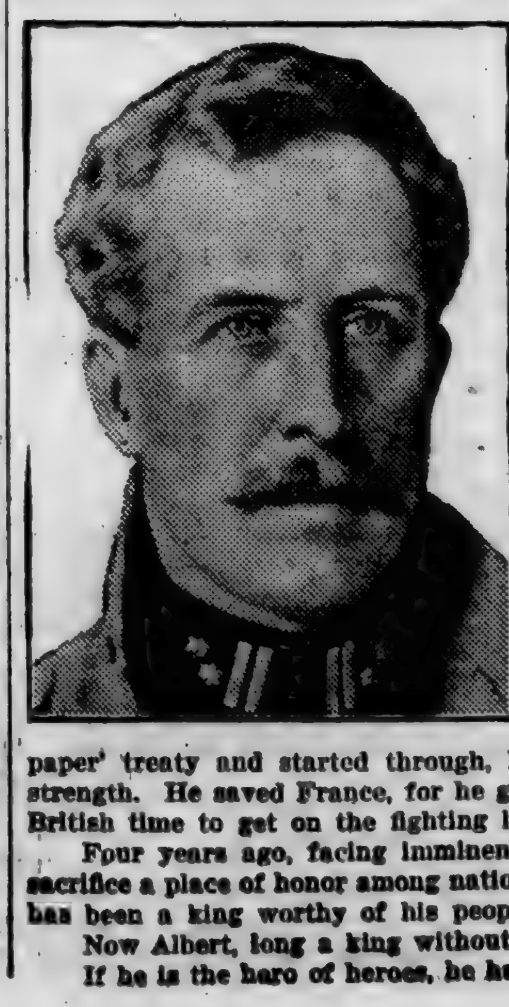
If out of the great war comes the republic of Poland and Jan Ignace Paderewski is made its first president, the new republic will not have to tell the world who its chief executive is. For all the world knows that he is the foremost pianist of his day and generation and among the greatest performers the world has seen.

Born in 1859 in Podolia, which was taken from Poland by Russia in 1793, he was a professor of music in the Warsaw conservatory at eighteen. His debut took place in Vienna in 1887. Since 1892 he has been a familiar figure in the United States. He has been at the head of the work of forming the Polish legion here and of raising funds for the Polish cause.

Polish troops have taken possession of Posen, capital of German Poland. The Galician socialist leader, Daszynski, has been appointed premier of Poland and charged with the formation of a cabinet by General Pilsudski, to whom the Polish regency council has intrusted the formation of a national government.

It is stated that the Poles scattered throughout the world number 31,800,000; that of these 27,100,000 are in Europe, and that of the latter 26,200,000 in Russian Poland, Prussian Poland, Austrian Poland, Lithuania and Little Russia have the right of self-determination.

ALBERT I, HERO OF HEROES



If the world were asked to choose the hero of heroes of the greatest war of all history, on whom would the choice fall? The list of popular heroes is long—Wilson, Pershing, Lloyd George, Haig, Beatty, Sims, Clemenceau, Petain, Joffre, Foch, Diaz, Lufbery, Guynemer, and so on.

Each of these popular heroes would undoubtedly have his adherents. But many people in all the nations of earth would choose as the hero of heroes:

Albert I, king of Belgium.

They would not claim that Albert was the superior of these men in the qualities that make them great. They would simply say in his behalf:

"Here is a man who instantly saw his duty and did it forthwith because it was his duty. When Germany demanded passage for her troops he replied, 'Belgium is a nation, not a road.' When Germany tore up the 'scrap-of-paper' treaty and started through, he resisted to the limit of the nation's strength. He saved France, for he gave the French time to entrench and the British time to get on the fighting line."

Four years ago, facing imminent destruction, Belgium won by her self-sacrifice a place of honor among nations, a crown of honor imperishable. Albert has been a king worthy of his people.

Now Albert, long a king without a country, has come back into his own. If he is the hero of heroes, he has a proportionate reward.

GREAT is the rejoicing in the courts and cabinets of the earth. The air is surcharged with messages of felicitation to and from the seats of the mighty. A prouder light than ever before glints from the names of Wilson, Lloyd George and Clemenceau; while every heart swells with fresh homage to Foch, Pershing, Haig, Petain and Diaz.

But the men who won this war and delivered humanity from bondage do not sit on thrones nor in executive mansions nor in the center of official staffs at headquarters. Nay, they are those who have come up out of great tribulation at Verdun, at Cambrai and at Chateau-Thierry; or, on wild nights at sea, with their gallant ship mortally wounded by the submarine assassin's bolt, upheld the honor of their navy and their flag as they lifted women and children into the lifeboats and sank to a mariner's heroic grave.

Some of them lay in misery where they fell on the war-stained fields of France; some toss and moan in hospital tents; some walk the earth with blinded eyes or crippled limbs or shattered nerves; some rest till judgment day among the caverns of the deep; some "sleep the sleep that knows no breaking" in Flanders fields or beneath Alpine snows or along the ensanguined waters of the Marne.

They are the winners of this war—the men who bared their breasts to the German sword; who dropped to agonizing fate in the first undreamed of blasts of poisonous fumes; who went over the top to certain destruction when the orders rang; who kept their rendezvous with death; who took the khaki and the gun instead of the cap and the gown. Living or dead, it is their victory; and, for them, let the laurels bloom and the bells ring and the flags flutter over a redeemed and happy land!

Millions Making Cough Medicine at Home and Saving 400 Per Cent.

Why Pay an Extra Price When You Can Get Glando Pine—Same Quality, Same Quantity—and at the Same Old Price?

"[illegible] you can get 8 ounces of Glando Pine. Mix it with good syrup or strained honey enough to make a pint, and you will have the best cough medicine you ever used. It can't be beat for coughs, colds, hoarseness, throat irritation or croup. Glando Pine relieves the spasmodic coughing in whooping cough. Children love to take it. To prevent a cold from developing into pneumonia or bronchitis, hold a teaspoonful of Glando Pine well back in the mouth and take a few deep breaths before swallowing it. You can feel the air cells opening up and you will breathe deep and easy.

Mrs. W. M. J. Ketlers, of Lima, Ohio, says: "I took cold, which developed into a severe cough. It hung on for several months. I coughed terribly, especially at night. I lived in a flat and my neighbors, believing me to have tuberculosis, asked the owner of the flat to have me move out, which he did. I used different remedies, but found no relief until I used Glando Pine. The first dose seemed to help me. I began gaining flesh; and by the time I had used two bottles, my cough was gone. Over a year has passed and my cough has not returned. I believe Glando Pine saved my life."

Glando Pine is manufactured by the Gland-Aid Co., Fort Wayne, Ind.

Dear Members of Sunday School:

I wish to express in a few words the appreciation and happiness which I feel as a result of the numerous letters and cards written by you and forwarded to me over here, they having reached me a few weeks ago. My dear old grandmother told me what you people were going to do about a week before the letters arrived, and I tell you that I eagerly watched each mail that came in the hope that it would contain the coveted envelope. And finally I was rewarded. To say I was glad to hear from so many of my old friends and to know that they remembered me and still had us fellows in their thoughts and prayers is a very mild way of expressing it. I read each and every one with the greatest interest, and still carry the bunch in my coat pocket—a treasure to be kept and held as a sacred trust of the friendship and well wishes of all you good people.

We are enjoying the most delightful weather at the present time that one could wish. The days are cool; but, for the most part, are sunny and not disagreeable, especially outdoors where the sun strikes. It is rather cool in-doors, though, as we work practically all of the time in the office without any fire whatever, except for a very few minutes when one is led to take off the chill of the atmosphere early in the morning. The most disagreeable thing with which we have to contend is the mud. It is everywhere, even weeks after the last rain. The streets are covered all the time, although they are all constructed of stone; and there are no semblances of sidewalks in these small towns, everyone walking in the streets; and trucks are passing by all the time, so you can readily see that our life is a muddy one. The houses are all built right out to the street and there are no front yards at all, a stone wall connecting any two buildings that don't happen to be built touching each other; and these houses and walls are covered with mud, or "boo," as it is called in France; also, every door and window.

We have a great time learning to "parlez" the French language. It is getting much easier to make ourselves understood, but we have not reached that advanced stage where we can enter into a conversation with any of the natives. For some reason or other, they don't seem to understand our style of French. (Ha! ha!) But it is fun just the same to tackle some difficult sentence that you wish to say and work it out, making them understand by much gesturing and loud talking, in which English and French are mixed profusely.

Roy and Merwin Place are billeted in a small town about 4 kilometers from the town in which we are located. I saw them a week ago last Sunday afternoon and they came back with me over here in the evening to attend religious services at the Y. M. C. A., conducted by My. Stone, a former minister of Pittsburgh, Pa. He is a very fine gentleman, and is certainly interested in his work. There are three other men assisting him, including a lawyer from Milwaukee and a former college professor. For the most part, these Y. M. C. A. workers over here are men of about middle age, who have left homes with wives and children in them to do their bit as near as they could get to the front, their hearts and spirits being with the boys fighting there; and they, of course, being too old to get into the real game itself, did the next best thing that they could, and here they are. I attended a mid-week prayer meeting at his office last night, only five of us fellows being in attendance. His ubject was "The Sabbath Day and What to Do With It." He brought out his lesson by giving us numerous illustrations of the way in which Christ occupied Himself on the Lord's day, and said it was up to us to do with it individually as we saw best, in-so-far as it was in accord with the precepts laid down by Christ. His main point was that the Lord's day was not a day for self pleasure in idleness nor was it a day of rest; but it was a day to be devoted to the doing of good, and in-so-far as it proved to be a change from the daily routine of our work-day occupations, it was in that respect a day of rest, as a change of work is really a rest. I was greatly helped by his words and came away feeling that I had been well repaid for having been in attendance at the meeting.

Do you remember the young man about whom I told you last year who was sick in the Walter Reed general hospital and to whom you sent a number of messages of comfort and cheer? Listen, this man is still in that hospital, having been there nearly seventeen months, and will probably be there for several months to come. He takes the great disaster that has befallen his life in a very quiet way and has no complaint to make whatever. He himself has kept all this a secret from his widowed mother living in Florida, but she has found out through some one else. He bagan sitting up in a wheel chair a few weeks ago, and seems to enjoy it very much after so many months in bed. He is receiving a book keeping course at government expense, it being part of the great plan of the government to teach those in its service incapacitated for duty the means of some gainful occupation, so that they will be able to earn a livelihood after returning to civil life. I hear from this man very often, and he is always so cheerful and happy in his letters. Only three weeks ago, I met his brother over here. He is a first lieutenant. He was gassed last spring, but is expecting to be back in active service in a very short time, he having practically recovered from the effects of the gas, and for the past few months having been in charge of a bunch of workmen who are engaged in constructing buildings for army purposes. We had a most delightful talk about his brother. Now, here is what I want you to do again this year, please: each of you write him a short message of cheer and comfort as you did last Christmas. It will be a great help him. He was so pleased to hear from you people last year. His name and address is Vernon M. Holston, Ward 4, Walter Reed General Hospital, Tacoma Park, Washington, D C. I thank you all in advance for this, for I know that you will do it.

I have written much longer than I expected to when I started; and as it is getting rather late, I will close. Wish I were there to be with you in your work and studies; but always remember that although I am absent in person, I am with you in my thoughts, and often do I find myself going back over the days when I was teaching the Boys' Brotherhood class, and how much pleasure it afforded me is easier to realize now than it was then. It is a great privilege to be in charge of the teaching of a class of young men or young women and a position to be envied by the best, for a great influence for good may be exerted upon those whom you are endeavoring to instruct.

May God's richest blessing rest on all of you forever more is my earnest prayer.

Hoping to hear from all of you in the near future again and asking that you always remember me in your daily prayets, I remain, as ever, your sincere friend and brother,
WILLIE GRAY WOODCOX.

Carolyn of the Corners

RUTH BELMORE ENDICOTT

COPYRIGHT -1918- BY DODD, MEAD AND COMPANY.

CAROLYN AND PRINCE HAVE ANOTHER ADVENTURE WHICH BRINGS THEM NEW LAURELS.

Synopsis.—Her father and mother reported lost at sea when the Dunraven, on which they had sailed for Europe, was sunk, Carolyn May Cameron—Hanna's Car'lyn—is sent from New York to her bachelor uncle, Joseph Stagg, at the Corners. The reception given her by her uncle is not very enthusiastic. Carolyn is also chilled by the stern demeanor of Aunty Rose, Uncle Joe's housekeeper. Stagg is dismayed when he learns from a lawyer friend of his brother-in-law that Carolyn has been left practically penniless and consigned to his care as guardian. Carolyn learns of the estrangement between her uncle and his one-time sweetheart, Amanda Parlow, and the cause of the bitterness between the two families. Prince, the mongrel dog that Carolyn brought with her, and the boon companion of the lonesome girl, is in disfavor with Uncle Joe, who threatens to dispose of him, but Prince becomes a hero and wins the approval of the Corners by routing a tramp in the act of robbing the schoolteacher. The following Sunday, while Carolyn and her uncle, accompanied by Prince, are taking a walk in the woods they encounter Amanda Parlow. Prince kills a snake about to strike Amanda, and Stagg and Amanda speak to each other for the first time in years. Carolyn is dismayed when she learns from Chet Gormley, her uncle's clerk, that she was left practically penniless and is a "charity" orphan.

—10—

"So, you see," added the child, "I am charity. I'm not like other girls that's got papas and mammas. 'Course I knowed that before, but it didn't seem—seem so hard as it does now," she confessed with a sob.

"My dear! my dear!" cried Miss Amanda, dropping on her knees beside the little girl, "don't talk so! I know your uncle must love you."

"Oh, Miss Mandy!" gasped Carolyn May, "don't you s'pose he loves other folks, too? You know—folks he'd begun to love ever so long ago?"

The woman's smooth cheeks burned suddenly and she stood up.

"I'm 'most sure he'd never stop loving a person if he'd once begun to love 'em," said Carolyn May, with a high opinion of the faithfulness of Uncle Joe's character.

"Do you want to know if your Uncle Joe loves you?" she asked Carolyn May at last. "Do you?"

"Oh, I do!" cried the little girl.

"Then ask him," advised Miss Amanda. "That's the only way to do with Joe Stagg, if you want to get at the truth. Out with it, square, and ask him."

"I will do it," Carolyn May said seriously.

After the child had gone the woman went back into the little cottage and her countenance did not wear the farewell smile that Carolyn May had looked back to see.

Gripping at her heart was the old pain she had suffered years before and the conflict that had seared her mind so long ago was roused again.

"Oh, Joe! Oh, Joe! How could you?" she moaned, rocking herself to and fro. "How could you?"

That very night the first snow flurry of the season drove against the west window panes of the big kitchen at the Stagg homestead. It was at supper time.

"I declare for't," said Mr. Stagg, "I guess winter's onto us, Aunty Rose."

This snow did not amount to much; it was little more than a hoar frost, as Mr. Stagg said. This might be, however, the last chance for a Sunday walk in the woods for some time and Carolyn May did not propose to miss it.

On this day she earnestly desired to get him off by himself, for her heart was filled with a great purpose. She felt that they must come to an understanding.

On this particular occasion Uncle Joe sat down upon the log by the brook where Miss Amanda had once sat. Carolyn May stood before him.

"Am I just a charity orphan? Didn't my papa leave any money a-tall for me? Did you take me just out of charity?"

"Bless me!" gasped the hardware dealer.

"I—I wish you'd answer me, Uncle Joe," went on Carolyn May with a brave effort to keep from crying.

Joseph Stagg was too blunt a person to see his way to dodging the question.

"Hum! Well, I'll tell you, Car'lyn May. There isn't much left, and that's a fact. It isn't your father's fault. He thought there was plenty. But a business he invested in got into bad hands and the little nest egg he'd laid up for his family was lost."

"Then—then I am just charity. And so's Prince," whispered Carolyn May. "I—I s'pose we could go to the poorhouse, Prince and me; but they mayn't like dogs there. You're real nice to me, Uncle Joe; but Prince and me—we really are a nuisance to you."

The man stared at her for a moment in silence, but the flush that dyed his cheeks was a flush of shame.

"Don't you like it any more here with Aunty Rose and—and me?" he demanded.

"Oh, yes! Only—only, Uncle Joe, I don't want to stay, if we're a nuisance, Prince and me. I don't want to stay, if you don't love me."

Joseph Stagg had become quite excited.

"Bless me!" he finally cried once more. "How do you know I don't love you, Carolyn May?"

"Why—why— But, Uncle Joe: how do I know you do love me?" demanded the little girl. "You never told me so!"

The startled man sank upon the log again.

"Well, maybe that's so," he murmured. "I s'pose it isn't my way to be very—very—softlike. But listen here, Car'lyn May."

"Yes, sir."

"I ain't likely to tell you very frequently how much I—I think of you. Ahem! But you'd better stop worrying about such things as money and the like. What I've got comes pretty near belonging to you. Anyway, unless I have to go to the poorhouse myself, I reckon you needn't worry about going," and he coughed again dryly.

"As far as loving you— Well, I'll admit, under cross-examination, that I love you."

"Dear Uncle Joe!" she sighed ecstatically. "I don't mind if I am charity. If you love me, it takes all the sting out. And I'll help to make you happy, too!"

CHAPTER IX.

A Find in the Drifts.

Before the week was over, winter had come to Sunrise Cove and The Corners in earnest. Snow fell and drifted, until there was scarcely anything to be seen one morning when Carolyn May awoke and looked out of her bedroom windows but a white, fleecy mantle.

This was more snow than the little girl had ever seen in New York. She came down to breakfast very much excited.

Uncle Joe had shoveled off the porch and steps, and Prince had beaten his own dooryard in the snow in front of his house. For he had a house of his own, now—a roomy, warm one—built by Mr. Parlow.

It must be confessed that, although Uncle Joe paid for the building of his doghouse, it never would have been built by Jedidiah Parlow had it not been for Carolyn May.

At noon Uncle Joe came home, dragging a sled—a big roomy one, glistening with red paint. Just the nicest sled Carolyn May had ever seen, and one of the best the hardware dealer carried in stock.

"Oh, my, that's lovely!" breathed the little girl in awed delight. "That's ever so much better than any sled I ever had before. And Prince could draw me on it, if I only had a harness for him. He used to drag me in the park. Of course, if he saw a cat, I had to get off and hold him."

Mr. Stagg, once started upon the path of good deeds, seemed to like it. At night he brought home certain straps and rivets, and in the kitchen, much to Aunty Rose's amazement, he fitted Prince to a harness which the next day Carolyn May used on the dog, and Prince drew her very nicely along the beaten paths.

By Saturday the roads were in splendid condition for sleighing.

So Carolyn May went sledding.

Out of sight of the houses grouped at The Corners the road to town seemed as lonely as though it were a veritable wilderness. Here and there the drifts had piled six feet deep, for the wind had a free sweep across the barrens.

"Now, there's somebody coming," said Carolyn May, seeing a moving object ahead between the clouds of drifting snow spray. "Is it a sleigh, Princey, or just a man?"

She lost sight of the object, then sighted it again.

"It must be a man. It can't be a bear, Princey."

The strange object had disappeared again.

It was just at the place where the spring spouted out of the rocky hillside and trickled across the road. There was a sort of natural watering trough here in the rock where the horses stopped to drink. The dog drew the little girl closer to the spot.

"Where has that man gone to? If it was a man."

Prince stopped suddenly and whined and then looked around at his mistress, as though to say: "See there!"

Carolyn May tumbled off the sled in a hurry. When she did so she slipped on a patch of snow-covered ice and fell. But she was not hurt.

"There! that's where the water runs across the road. It's all slippery—Oh!"

It was the sleeve of a man's rough coat thrust out of the snowbank that brought this last cry to the child's lips.

"Oh, oh! It's a man!" burst from Carolyn May's trembling lips. "How cold he must be!"

She plumped down on her knees and began brushing the snow away. She uncovered his shoulder. She took hold of this with her mittened hands and tried to shake the prone figure.

"Oh, do wake up! Please wake up!" she cried, digging away the snow as fast as possible.

A shaggy head was revealed, with an old cap pulled down tightly over the ears. The man moved again and grunted something. He half turned over, and there was blood upon the snow, and a great frosted cake of it on the side of his face.

Carolyn May was dreadfully frightened. The mans' head was cut and the blood was smeared over the front of his jacket. Now she could see a puddle of it, right where he had fallen on the ice—just as she had fallen herself. Only, he had struck his head on a rock and cut himself.

"You poor thing!" murmured Carolyn May. "Oh, you mustn't lie here! You must get up! You'll—you'll be frozen!"

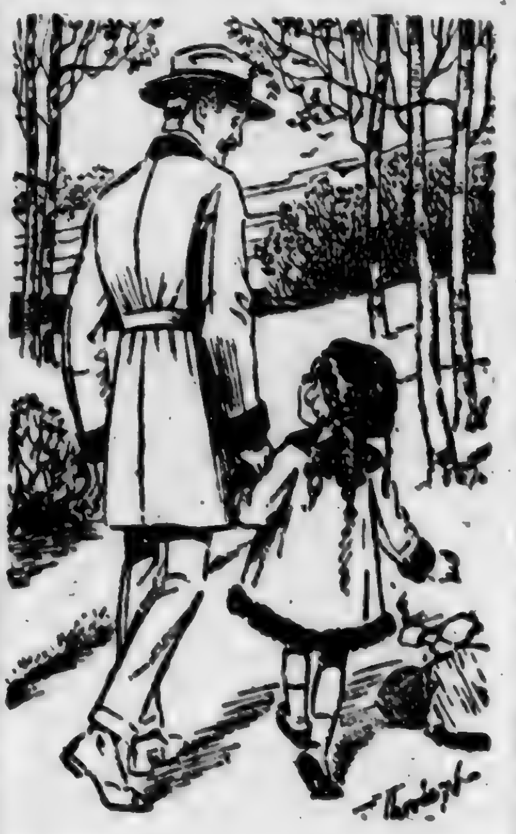
"Easy, mate," muttered the man. "I ain't jest right in my top-hamper, I reckon. Hold hard, matey."

He tried to get up. He rose to his knees, but pitched forward again. Carolyn May was not afraid of him now—only troubled.

"I'll take you to Miss Amanda's," cried the little girl, pulling at his coat again. "She's a nurse, and she'll know just what to do for you. Come, Prince and I will take you."

Then she guided the half-blinded man to the sled, on which he managed to drop himself.

Prince pulled, and Carolyn May pulled, and together they got the sled, with the old sailor upon it, to the Parlow carpenter shop.



"If You Love Me It Takes All the Sting Out."

Mr. Parlow slid back the front door of his shop to stare in wonder at the group.

"For the great land of Jehoshaphat!" he croaked. "Car'lyn May! what you got there?"

"Oh, Mr. Parlow, do come and help us—quick!" gasped the little girl. "My friend has had a dreadful bad fall."

"Your friend?" repeated the carpenter. "I declare, it's that tramp that went by here just now!"

Mr. Parlow made a clucking noise in his throat when he saw the blood.

"Guess you're right, Car'lyn May," he admitted. "Call Mandy. She must see this."

Miss Amanda's attention had already been attracted to the strange arrival. She ran out and helped her father raise the injured man from the sled. Together they led him into the cottage.

He was not at all a bad-looking man, although his clothing was rough and coarse.

Miss Amanda brought warm water and bathed the wound, removing the congealed blood from his face and neck.

When the last bandage was adjusted and the injured man's eyes were closed, Mr. Parlow offered him a wine-glass of a home-made cordial. The sailor gulped it down, and the color began to return to his cheeks.

"Where was you goin', anyway?" demanded the carpenter.

"Lookin' for a job, mate," said the sailor. "There's them in town that tells me I'd find work at Adams' camp."

"Ha! didn't tell you 'twas ten mile away from here, did they?"

Miss Amanda gets some surprising information from the old sailor and she, in turn, gives Joseph Stagg a shock. Read about how it happened in the next installment.

A World Crime

By BLISS CARMAN

of The Vigilantes

Only a remnant of the ancient Armenian race remains, mostly old men and children. The rest of it has been wiped out by the Turk and the Teuton, Turkish racial animosity directed by cold-blooded Teuton efficiency and brutishness. We are asked in the name of humanity to save the remaining sufferers from starvation, and their race from obliteration.

The tale of this episode of the great war is a harrowing one, and it will last until all history fades out forever, and this is a good time to recall it—good for us who have lived for four years and had no real sense of war, while millions were living in hell.

The story cannot be told fully yet, but there are incidents, pages in the horrible chapter, which should fill us with implacable horror of the Teuton-Turk and a moving, active pity for his victims.

The Armenian atrocity had one conception and one purpose, but it was carried out in various ways. The first portion of the Armenian race to feel the blow was not the native population of Armenia proper, but the scattered Armenian communities in various Turkish towns and cities. The procedure in over fifty places through Anatolia was identical. The same directions from Constantinople were exactly carried out in each case by the local authorities, and in one or two instances where these authorties were too humane to fulfill their monstrous orders they were removed and more rigorous officers put in their places. Usually the procedure was in this wise.

The First Cruelties.

"On a given day the streets of whatever town it might be were occupied by the local gendarmerie with fixed bayonets, and the governor summoned all able-bodied men of Armenian race that had been exempted from military draft to present themselves now on pain of death. 'Able-bodied' included any male between fifteen and seventy years of age, and these were all marched out of the town by the gendarmes. They had not far to go, for the gendarmerie had been re-enforced for the purpose from the gaols, and the brigands and Kurds were waiting in the hills. They were waiting to murder the prisoners. The first secluded valley witnessed their wholesale massacre, and acquitted of their task the gendarmes marched leisurely into town.

"This was the first act. It preceded the pitiful possibility of resistance to the second, which was more ingenious and far-reaching. The women, old men and children, who made up the remainder of the Armenian population, were not given notice of deportation within a fixed term—a week or ten days. Whole households were uprooted and driven off to an unknown destination, while their homes and property were transferred to Moslems."

To read of such things is to imagine that these victims must have been savages, some bands of half-civilized pitiable creatures, the lowest grade of humanity. They were not. They were city dwellers, responsible folk, small shopkeepers, professional men, traders, like ourselves, like the citizens of any American small town, minding their own affairs, self-supporting, well-to-do, asking only to be let alone. Their women were as refined and delicate as our own, as unused to hardship, having the same religion, the same desire for education for their children as we have. These communities were first robbed of their men, and then torn from their homes and sent to a more dreadful fate than the fathers and sons had suffered. They were told that they were to be deported to other localities. They set out on foot, destitute, half-clothed, for their unknown destination, under guard of their oppressors, and were led into the desert to die by the way by scores and hundreds. Children perished of exposure, of cold in the mountains, of heat and thirst in the desert, of starvation elsewhere. Their mothers went mad of frantic grief. The older girls and younger women were sold to any who would buy and passed into Turkish harems or into the hands of more brutal possessors.

So the diminishing columns passed on to the most desolate regions of the south until the remnants reached, in some cases, the Euphrates. Here those that remained alive were loaded into boats or on rafts, floated out into the middle of the stream and shoved overboard.

Thousands Are Slaughtered.

The Novoye Vremya of Petrograd contained this news: "The Turkish atrocities in the district of Bitlis are indescribable. After having massacred the whole male population of the district the Turks collected 9,000 women and children from the surrounding villages and drove them in upon Bitlis. Two days later they marched them out to the bank of the Tigris, shot them all and threw the 9,000 corpses into the river."

A newspaper in Tiflis reported: "The Turks have massacred the whole male population in the plain of Marsh. Only 5,000 people have succeeded in escaping and finding refuge in Sassam, where the insurgent Armenians are still holding out."

One of the directors of an educational institution supported by foreign missionaries in an Anatolian town testifies: "Of the Armenian people as a whole we may put an estimate that three-fourths are gone, and this three-fourths includes the leaders in every walk of life—merchants, professional men, preachers, bishops and government officials—I have said enough. Our hearts are sick with the sights and stories of abject terror and suffering. The extermination of the race seems to be the objective, and the means employed are more fiendish than could be concocted locally. The orders are from headquarters, and any reprieve must be from the same source."

No reprieve from that source ever came. Not until the allied armies on the western front put a quietus on the Potsdam gang could there be any reprieve for this pitiful people. Not until the "Unspeakable Turk," defeated by the British under Allenby, has finally been sequestered in strict bounds can Armenians be safe. We have had no part in the horror of putting the Turk where he belongs. We can at least come to the aid of his pitiful victims and help to restore them to some small share in the freedom of life.

Wipe Out the Profiteer

By MARK SWAN

of The Vigilantes

From the lowest, to the super-lowest, we loathe the obscene Beast who drowned women and children on unwarned vessels—who burned villages, destroyed orchards—outraged women—and bombed hospitals. We ransack the dictionary and exhaust the vocabulary, endeavoring to select adjectives which will fitly describe him, and his works and finally we sum everything up in the descriptive word—"Hun."

Now what shameful word is left us to apply to the men—who are among us yet are not of us—who used the war as a means of extorting bloated profits from those whose brothers they pretend to be?

The Prussian, at least, is an open enemy. He warned us for 40 years that he would do what he has done—he has never tried to conceal his bestiality, in fact seems rather proud of it.

The spy, the propagandist—the dynamiter who blows up munition works—for all of these there can be found some shred of excuse; being Prussian, it was their business to do what frightful thing they could—and ours to hang them if we caught them doing it.

No Excuse for Profiteers.

But for the profiteer, the briber, the apostle of the filthy creed, "Get it—no matter how—just get it"—the men of our own nation, of our own blood—pretending to be our own kind—hypocritically calling us fellow citizens, while they pick our pockets—there is no excuse—and there is no appropriate adjective—to call them "Huns" would be complimentary.

Here we are, a hundred million of us—who were drawn into a world nightmare, trying to do our best, to help: Boosting the Red Cross—plugging for the Y. M. C. A—and what is he—the profiteer doing?

Why just lining his greedy pockets—wallowing in illegitimate profits—which in the last analysis resolve themselves into the blood of brave men and the lives of little children.

And even in this deviltry there are grades. The man who extorts for his hoarded food—or his hoarded coal—is low enough, in all conscience, but he may only be a creature without a soul, so that the vast agony has not touched him. Not being a victim, he cannot realize there was such a thing as war. His penalty should be merely confiscation and banishment.

No Punishment Too Severe.

But for the debased scoundrel, who bribes some other loathsome creature to help him foist counterfeit clothing, or ammunition—or poisonous food, on the army—on the very men who fought for him—there is no punishment outside the ultimate depths of the seventh hell.

We could stand them up against a wall and shoot them—but it would be a shame to desecrate a decent wall—we have a myriad lamp-posts, but why shame honest rope? Just as we lack words to describe them—we lack punishment to inflict. We can only recall with regret the passing of the rack and the wheel.

What would happen to a cook who fed his company poisonous food?

What would happen to an officer who sent his men forward to meet the enemy—equipped with blank cartridges or to quartermaster who for his own profit dealt out shoes with paper soles? Is the crime less, because it is committed 3,000 miles away?

of the Vigilantes.

Last year it was our heritage, the red and white and blue;
Our grandsires died to raise it and our sires to keep it true.
We prayed we might be worthy of their memory as we cast
In shimmering beauty to the wind the banner of our past.
But now—O God, our hearts are with our living and our dead!
Bone of our bone the white has grown, flesh of our flesh the red.
Our substance and our souls are pledged to keep it undefiled.
Last year it was our heritage—today it is our child.

TOO WEAK TO FIGHT

The "Come-back" man was really never down-and-out. His weakened condition because of overwork, lack of exercise, improper eating and living demands stimulation to satisfy the cry for a health-giving appetite and the refreshing sleep essential to strength. GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules, the National Remedy of Holland, will do the work. They are wonderful. Three of these capsules each day will put a man on his feet before he knows it; whether his trouble comes from uric acid poisoning, the kidneys, gravel or stone in the bladder, stomach derangement or other ailments that befall the over-zealous American. The best known, most reliable remedy for these troubles is GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules. This remedy has stood the test for more than 200 years since its discovery in the ancient laboratories in Holland. It acts directly and gives relief at once. Don't wait until you are entirely down-and-out, but take them today. Your druggist will gladly refund your money if they do not help you. Accept no substitutes. Look for the name GOLD MEDAL on every box, three sizes. They are the pure, original, imported Haarlem Oil Capsules.—Adv.

Your Labor Counts—every ounce of work you do helps some soldier. This war was fought as truly in the household and in the workshop as it was in the trenches.

Some of our American women are borne down physically and mentally, by the weaknesses of their sex. They suffer from backache, dragging sensation, bearing-down pains, very nervous and pain in top of head. If they ask their neighbors they will be told to take a Favorite Prescription of Dr. Pierce's which has been so well and favorably known for the past half century.

Weak women should try it now. Don't wait! Today is the day to begin. This temperance tonic and nervine will bring vim, vigor and vitality. Send Dr. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y., 10c. for trial pkg. tablets.

Lafayette, Ind.—"I was in such a terribly nervous condition that I could not sleep at night. I would have dreadful nightmares. My druggist recommended Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription to me and it has helped me wonderfully. The first half bottle cured me of my nervousness and made me able to sleep at night just as quiet as a child. It has also relieved me of pain which used to bother me a great deal at times. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a grand tonic for women and I do not hesitate to recommend it."—Mrs. Chas. Coleman, 831 Ferry St.

Acid-Stomach Ruins Health of Millions

Besides those painful attacks of indigestion; that awful bloated, lumpy feeling after eating and downright stomach misery that you who have experienced it know so well; besides disgusting belching, food-repeating, sour stomach and distressing heartburn—besides all this, ACID-STOMACH undermines the health and saps the strength of millions.

If you don't get rid of those stomach miseries there is no telling where your stomach troubles will end, for it is a well known scientific fact that many serious ailments have their start in an acid-stomach.

Start now—this very day to get rid of your stomach miseries—take EATONIC—the wonderful remedy that absorbs the excess acid from the stomach and brings INSTANT relief. You simply have no idea how much better, stronger and brighter you feel at once. It drives out all the gas and bloat, puts an immediate stop to belching and heartburn, ends stomach suffering and makes it cool, sweet, comfortable and strong.

There can be no further excuse for you to allow acid-stomach to wreck your health—pile up misery upon misery until you get to the point where you feel down and out and that life has lost all its joys. Remember, just an acid-mouth ruins teeth, so acid-stomach ruins health.

Take EATONIC. It's good, just like a bit of candy and makes the stomach feel fine. You can then eat the things you like, and, what is more, every mouthful you eat will count in creating power and energy. You'll feel so much better—have punch and pep—the power and will to do things and get results, and your stomach misery will be gone.

Take our advice. Get a big box of EATONIC from your druggist today, it costs so little. If it fails to remove your stomach distress, he will refund your money. That is guaranteed, you are to be satisfied or money refunded.

Red Cross Department

All chapters are urged to keep their organizations intact as far as possible until the scope and character of the future service required of the Red Cross can be determined. The Red Cross has a number of commissions in the various former fields of conflict, from which reports must come on which to base plans for future relief. We all know of our Civilian Relief program at home, and of the aid the R. C. will be able to furnish in the after care and demobilization plans of the Government.

While the work of some departments will be reduced and in some cases stopped, that of others may be largely increased.

The end of hostilities will cause many changes and as fast as the requirements can be known, we, must be patient and ready to respond to such calls with the zeal of the past.

With the end of the war many of us may not feel the same call to serve which obtained when our boys were in danger—but there still remains a REAL Red Cross service to be rendered in many fields, the details of which remain to be developed and which should prompt ALL to continue to serve.

KNIT!

The knitting of socks and sweaters must be carried on in a big way regardless of the cessation of hostilities. The Division Bureau of Chapter Production has asked all chapters to indicate how much yarn they will accept for knitting into socks on or before Dec. 31st. Estimates of the amount that can be used during January have also been asked for.

The local sewing rooms will be open again this week for work. All ladies who have worked thirty-six hours will be awarded a Red Cross to be worn on sewing aprons or uniforms. The call is sounded for workers, Come.

Everyone answering the Christmas Roll Call for universal membership in the Red Cross during the week of Dec. 16—23 will receive with the membership ten of the Christmas seals which have been sold in past years by the National Tuberculosis Association.

This is to be the only method of distributing the seals this year, it is announced by W. W. Wheeler, director of the Red Cross Christmas Roll Call in the Lake Division states of Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky.

"The American Red Cross," says Mr. Wheeler, "has concluded an arrangement with the National Tuberculosis Association under which the Red Cross appropriated $2,500,000 to aid the anti-tuberculosis work of the National Tuberculosis Association and associations hitherto supported by the sale of Christmas seals."

Obituary

Aden D Brunson, trustee-elect of Wilmington township, fell dead Tuesday whihe cutting wood. With Fred Badman, a neighbor, he was sawing a log and had only cut a short distance through the wood until he stopped suddenly and said to Mr. Badmad, "You will have to wait just a minute."

A second later he fell to the ground and within a few minutes breathed his last, having suffered a severe attack of heart trouble. Medical aid was hurriedly summoned but to no avail. Only that morning Mr. Brunson had told his wife upon leaving the house that he never felt better in his life.

The deceased was 68 years of age and was elected trustee of Wilmington township on the republican ticket at the election held Tuesday, November 5. Only a few days ago he went to Auburn and qualified for the office and expected to assume his new duties on January 1, succeeding C. C. Cook, the present trustee of the township.

Mr. Brunson had been troubled at times with heart trouble but otherwise was in the best of health.

Aden D. Brunson was born in Allen county, Indiana, September, 6, 1850, and died at his home December 3, 1918, aged 68 years, 2 months and 27 days. He was a son of Nathan and Hannah Brunson, the former a native of New York state and the latter of Vermont; and was also one of a family of ten children.

He attended first the common schools of Allen county, supplementing this training by attendance at the Methodist college at Ft. Wayne. He then was a student in the Bryant & Stratton business college at Buffalo, New York, after which he learned the business of telegraphy, in which he was employed at Buffalo for some time. Then he went on the road as a traveling salesman for a Chicago house, after which he went to Springfield, Ill., moving from there to Ft. Wayne and thence to Newville, DeKalb county.

Mr. Brunson eventually located on a 22 acre farm in Wilmington township where he resided at the time of his death. The deceased was married to Alice V. Michaels, daughter of Oliver P. and Mary A. Michaels, on September 30, 1876. To Mr. and Mrs. Brunson four children were born, namely: Ada, the wife of C. C. Bassett of St. Joe; Ross, an engineer on the Baltimore & Ohio railroad, living at Willard, Ohio; Sterling, a farmer in Wilmington township, and Thomas, who is now at Camp Taylor, Ky., in military service.

Three brothers, Dr. V. C. Brunson and Sidney Brunson of Newville, and Reuben Brunson, of South Bend, survive. Three sisters, Mrs. Ella Folk and Mrs Susie Chilson, of South Bend, and Mrs. Cassie Sweet, of Fort Wayne, also survive.

Funeral services were held from the Newville Christian Church on Friday afternoon by Rev. Dinnamens with burial in Evergreen cemetery.

Among the out of town people who attended the funeral were Mr and Mrs. William Folk, Mrs Susie Chilson and Reuben Brunson of South Bend, Mrs. Cassie Sweet of Fort Wayne, Mr. and Mrs C. R. Brunson and daughters of Willard, Ohio and Thomas Brunson of Camp Taylor, Ky.

Fifteen Million Tons of Shipping

Building 15,000,000 tons of shipping is the big job laid out for American Shipyards. It will take years to do this. Men working in shipyards are assured of steady jobs if they make good. This great fleet of ships must be built. The United States is going to become the first maritime nation of the world.

We need men accustomed to out-of-doors work to help us build ships. The pay is set by the Emergency Fleet Corporation under direct Government control, and is higher than ever before in the history of the industry. Do not hesitate because you have never worked in a shipyard before. We will train you for some good job and will pay you well while you are learning.

It will take us years to build our share of 15,000,000 tons.

A shipyard is the ideal place to make good money this winter. Get in touch with us, either by calling at yard or by writing to us immediately. Some of our best jobs are open right now. Great Lakes Engineering Works, River Rouge and Detroit, Mich.—Adv.

Landlord's Experience With Glando

Mr. Haushalter, the well known and energetic proprietor of the Hotel Paulding, Paulding, Ohio, says that for several years he suffered from a sluggish liver, backache and kidney trouble. He felt so drowsy and languid he could scarcely drag. He says: "I tried a number of kidney pills and liver remedies and found no relief until I used Glando, the great gland tonic. It proved to be just what I needed. I am thoroughly convinced I would have been flat on my back if I had not used this treatment; but, instead of being laid up, I am feeling fine and looking after my business every day. If I feel any indication of my old trouble returning, I take a Glando treatment and that sets me right."

Mr. Haushalter was dying of self-poisoning caused by an inactive liver. This weakened the kidneys and other glands of the body. If he had not found a remedy that renewed glandular activity and removed the poison, his life undoubtedly have paid the penalty.

Glando Tonic is the only remedy of its kind on the market and its numerous cures is proof enough of its great value to mankind. It is sold by druggists or will be sent direct by the Gland-Aid Co., Fort Wayne, Ind. Large treatment, $1.00.

Stephen Brown and wife, and Frank Pervines spent Sunday with Daniel Shutts' of Hicksville.

Mrs. Reed and daughter Ida, of Hopewell, were Friday guests of Mrs. Cora Steward and family.

Sergeant L. B. Mumma, of Camp Wittenberg, visited Saturday and Sunday with his parents, Rev. and Mrs. Mumma.

C. C. Webb and wife entertained the following guests to a 6 o'clock dinner, Sunday: Lewis Markle and wife, and Dayton Webb and family.

News was received here that Miss Bertha Thornburg, while on a visit last week, at the home of her mother, had an attack of the "Flu".

Oscar Ruppert and family, of Antwerp; and Allen Dorsey and wife were guests of the latter's father, M. Ruppert and son John, Sunday.

Rev. A. K. Mumma was called to Hoagland, last Thursday morning, to conduct the funeral of Mrs. Belle Freeby, who died at Portland, Ind.

Baltzer Koontz and wife are at home after spending several weeks at the home of their son, in Fort Wayne. Mrs. Koontz is greatly improved in health.

Lee Wilmot and family, of near Garrett, were Sunday guests of Vern Wilmot and family. Master George Wilmot returned home with them for a week visit.

Mrs. Anna Baker received a letter last week from her son Eugene, saying he was shot in the foot while in a battle. He is now located at 15 Canadian General Hospital, Taplow Bucks, Maidenward, England.

The Red Cross Chapter of this place, shipped to Auburn on Monday the following—16 pair of pajamas suits and 40 pr. knitted socks. The Chapter received 10 Convalescence Robes, and they wish all sewers to assist as the robes are needed at once.

Mrs. Cora Steward received a letter, last week, from Lieut. Wooten of Camp Taylor, Ky., informing her that her late deceased son, Lewis Fredrick Steward, had been promoted to the rank of Sergeant. Mr. Steward enlisted and left Auburn, June 25, 1918, for Purdue University, and died Oct. 11, 1918, at Camp Taylor, Ky., of Spanish Influenza.

David Butler, an old pioneer residing one mile south of town, died Saturday night at his home, at the age of 76 years, of a complication of diseases. Mr. Butler had been in failing health for several years. He leaves besides his wife, two daughters, Mrs. Clyde Rectenwal and Mrs. Charles Chapman; one sister, Mrs. Minerva Moody; and three grandchildren. Funeral was held Tuesday afternoon at 2:00 o'clock, Rev. Bryan, officiating. Interment in White City Cemetery.

Great excitement was aroused last week, when a telegram from Washington was received by Mrs. Gertrude Markle announcing that her brother, John Shutt, who is in France, was missing in action on Oct. 4. This is not thought to be true as several people have received letters said to have been written later. An investigation is being made by the young man's father, G. M. Shutt. The news also arrived here last week from Hicksville, that Russell Davis, son of Mrs. Stephen Brown, was killed in action on Nov. 4. This is also thought untrue as no official news has been received here.

Next Tuesday night Dec. 17, 2nd. No. of Lecture Course. HENRY CLARK best thing that walks on the platform.—"If you like lectures hear Henry Clark, if you don't like lectures hear Henry Clark."

Elizabeth Zehner, was born in Richland Co., Mifflin Township, Ohio, on April 10th. 1824, and died at the home of Henry Markle, Spencerville, Ind., Nov. 19th. 1918. Age 94 years, 7 months and 9 days.

She moved with her husband, David Zehner, to Indiana in 1853, and located east of Spencerville, which was mostly a wilderness. There they built a log cabin and set to work clearing the woods for cultivation. To them were born 4 children, 1 son and 3 daughters. One daughter dying at the age of 2 years, another dying at the age of 10 years.

She united with the Lutheran Church in Richland Co., Ohio, when a girl of 16 years old, and transferred her membership to the Lutheran church at Spencerville, Feb. 22, 1860. Mrs. Zehner has lived in a firm hope in the Lord Jesus trusting in Him and His word. She has been faithful to the end. "She hath done what she could." Her husband died in 1880. She leaves one son, Samuel Zehner, and one daughter, Mrs. Kate Markel, both of this place; one sister, Sarah Zehner, near Auburn; 3 grandchildren, 10 great grandchildren and 7 great great grandchildren, and many friends. She has been a sufferer for 3 years with cancer the cause of her death. She bore her sufferings with Christian patience, longing for the day when her Lord would take her home.

The funeral services were conducted by her pastor, Rev. A. K. Mumma, in the Lutheran Church, and was laid to rest in the Spencerville Cemetery.

Mrs. Minnie Tarney was called to Butler the first of last week on occount of the illness of her daughter, Miss Fern, who was working there and taken ill with rheumatism.

The W. C. T. U. which was appointed to meet with Mrs. Dixon, was postponed for two reasons, the funeral of Mr. Brunson and the serious illness of Miss Dixon, the minister's daughter.

A letter from Byron Miller dated Oct. 29, received by his parents the 3rd. of Dec., said their division had just made a big drive. Letter says, all the boys from home were well as far as he knew.

The following officers were elected at the U. B. Sunday School last Sunday: Superintendent, L. W. Yeiser; assistant, Harry Weaner; secretary, John Washler; treasurer, Al Gengnagle; pianoist, Miss Bertha Platter re-elected; chorister, Miss Gladys Kain, re-elected; librarians, Masters Terry Traxler and Fredrick Gengnagle, re elected.

Rev. Dixon and wife were called to Fulton county on account of their daughter who was very ill with influenza. Friday while enroute home their machine turned over breaking Mrs. Dixon,s arm and otherwise bruising her. She was taken to the home of relatives where her injuries were attended to. Mr. Dixon returned home Saturday and assisted with the services Sunday morning, he is uninjured and expects to bring Mrs. Dixon home the first of the week. Miss Dixon, the daughter is on a fair road to recovery. The latter has been in the home of her sister whose husband is in the army.

Our Part in Feeding the Nation

(Special Information Service, United States Department of Agriculture.)

BIGGEST WAR GARDEN IS IN ARIZONA MOUNTAINS.

Gila County Gardener Planting His Crops. The Big Pipe Line in the Foreground Irrigates This and Other Sections of the Co-operative Plot.

USE IRRIGATION TO RAISE FOOD

America's Largest War Garden Tucked Away in Mountain Regions of Arizona.

DREAM OF A COUNTY AGENT

Employees of Large Mining Company, Formerly Dependent on Canned Goods, Now Have Fertile Gardens of Their Own.

Would you expect to find America's largest war garden tucked away in the mountains of Arizona, at an altitude of 3,350 feet? There it lies in fertile expanse, dependent upon irrigation for every drop which waters its soil.

This garden is the realized dream of County Agent J. R. Sandige of Gila county, Ariz. As emergency agent, his part in the program of work was to stimulate food production in Gila county. He saw hundreds of employees of the Inspiration Consolidated Copper company, in Miami, Ariz., dependent upon canned goods for food because they could not raise fresh vegetables in the arid soil of Miami. He saw also a great tract of land which needed only irrigation to make it suitable for gardens. Here was a chance to increase the nation's food supply. Mr. Sandige put the case to the copper company. The result was 7,050 one-eighth-acre gardens, which supplied $30,000 worth of vegetables last year and are expected nearly to double that figure in 1918.

The gardeners are miners, smelter men and millmen. They are a cosmopolitan group of many Americanized nationalities. Most of them have never gardened before where it was necessary to irrigate. In spite of this the crops from March 1 to December 1, 1918, promise to pass the $50,000 mark in value. More than $27,000 worth were accounted for by July 10.

How They Irrigate.

A gardener requires about 30 minutes to irrigate his garden, and he can easily do it before breakfast or when he returns from work in the evening. Gardens need irrigation once a week. Water is pumped from deep wells and carried to the gardens in large pipe lines, from which it is distributed to the individual plots by means of head gates and check gates.

Preference is given to necessary vegetables, such as potatoes, beans, peas, sweet corn, cabbage and tomatoes, while space not occupied by these is given to melons, squashes, pumpkins, peppers, peanuts and other less essential crops.

The double crop system is used, so that there is something on the ground all the time. For example, melons are planted among the beans, so that when the beans are gathered the melons will be on the ground.

A flock of hens for the miner's back yard is encouraged to help utilize the waste from the gardens, such as tops of beets, radishes and cabbage leaves.

Gardens for Whole Families.

It is not unusual to see a whole family at work in the garden, the little children almost hidden in the luxuriant growth of vegetables. The county agent or an assistant visits the gardens frequently and shows the gardeners how to plant, irrigate, cultivate and spray their vegetables.

The management of the gardens is in the hands of the employees' committee of the copper company, which issues bulletins of directions for the use of the gardeners. Ground, seed, water and spraying materials are furnished free by the company, as is also protection for the products. Marketing and canning and drying facilities are likewise free to all.

Through the county agent's efforts a war gardeners' market was built last year. In it all surplus products are disposed of at no expense to the grower. This year the market has been enlarged and a canning and drying building added, so that gardeners can learn to can and dry their own products. Drying and canning work is under the direction of the county home-demonstration agent of Gila county.

Other Gardens Started.

The success of the gardens has been assured from the outset. Since last year two other large copper companies in the vicinity have started gardens for their employees, on the advice of the county agent. An estimate of what this work has meant to Gila county is $70,000. This amount is exclusive of the small backyard gardens which have sprung up everywhere. The county agent estimates that these backyard gardens increase from 75 to 200 per cent in a district where regular war gardens have been started.

OKRA GOOD IN GARDENS

Okra, or gumbo, is a desirable addition to the vegetables grown in the home garden. It has been grown and used for years in the South, where it is found in almost every garden, and is increasing in popularity in the North.

In regions where the growing seasons are very short, okra plants may be started in a hotbed or greenhouse and transplanted to the open ground.

Okra is easily grown on any good soil, and a few plants will be sufficient for the average family.

The edible portion consists of the pods, which must be gathered and used while young and tender.

Okra is used mainly in soups, but may be served as a vegetable, boiled or baked, or as a salad. It may be kept for winter use by canning or drying.

The United States department of agriculture has recently republished Farmers' Bulletin 232, "Culture and Uses of Okra." Sent on application.

Co-operative Stores.

While co-operative stores in the United States are relatively unsuccessful as compared with typical co-operative stores in European countries, the lack of success is not due to the failure of the underlying principles of such enterprises to hold good in America, but to the business methods generally followed in such undertakings in this country. This conclusion has been reached as a result of a survey of 60 co-operative stores made by the office of markets and rural organization of the United States department of agriculture. In many American co-operative stores which have failed, mismanagement, inadequate accounting and auditing, lack of co-operation, poor business methods, and lack of judgment are responsible.

The results of the survey indicate that the co-operative store has tended to bring about lower prices, smaller margins of profit, more efficient business methods, and other practices beneficial to the farmer.

With the application of efficient business methods and the education of the farmer to a clear understanding of the functions of co-operative stores, they may be made successful. Instances are cited of unusual savings and large dividends to members of various associations. Such associations procure capable managers by paying adequate salaries; take advantage of large-scale purchasing and cash discounts; maintain proper accounts and cost records; and watch stock turnovers.

The more general, underlying conditions which investigations indicated should be present if a co-operative store is to be successful are: (1) good leadership among the members, (2) capable management, (3) favorable environment, with regard both to physical location and to social or occupational affiliations.

SHEEP INDUSTRY ON THE INCREASE.

Sheep Pastured in Cornfield Make Good Use of Rough Feed.

IMPROVEMENT IN SHEEP INDUSTRY

Gradual and Logical Movement in Industry Toward More and Better Flocks.

INCREASE MUTTON AND WOOL

Farmers Are Beginning to Realize That Dual Purpose Animals Fit Admirably Into System of Mixed Farming.

There has been a gradual and logical movement in the sheep industry toward more and better flocks on the farms of the Central and Eastern states. That the farm states are destined to become the seat of the great sheep industry and the farm flock a more important part in permanent agriculture, is the opinion of specialists of the United States department of agriculture who have been in close touch with the situation. While the number and size of the flocks in most of the range states are declining, there is a distinct trend toward the production of more wool and mutton in the states where more intensive farming is practiced, they say.

Taking the entire country as a whole, the sheep industry is on the increase. In 1917 there was a net increase of 2 per cent in the United States over 1916, according to reports of the bureau of crop estimates of the United States department of agriculture, while the July 1, 1918, estimates show a 12.7 per cent increase over the same date of the previous year. Further proof that the sheep industry has gathered impetus is shown by the record of wool production, estimates for 1918 showing 257,921,000 pounds, as against 240,573,000 pounds in 1917.

Reason for Farm Trend.

The increase in the farm states and the decrease in the range territory is due partly to the fact that range lands have increased in value and the continued homesteading has broken up the areas which were once in free range. In the farm states also, the wool type of sheep has given way to the wool and mutton varieties, which has been the principal factor in bringing about an increase. The decline in the sheep industry on the Western range should not be interpreted to mean that the business in that section is going to entirely disappear, for there is every reason to believe that the range country will always continue as an important sheep-producing center. Large areas in Western states will not economically lend themselves to any other grazing purposes.

Sheep which yield both wool and mutton are well adapted to more or less intensive farming. Farmers are beginning to realize that sheep of this kind fit admirably into a system of mixed farming, and with the meat and wool markets becoming more stabilized there is little need to become concerned with the yearly market fluctuations of these two products. Sheep on farms should be assured a larger place as they can successfully share with other stock in the economical and profitable utilization of farm crops, as well as being producers of valuable clothing material for which there is no complete substitute. Doubling our wool production would not render us independent of wool imports but would about meet the needs for military purposes and a large part of that needed for civilian uses.

Mistake to Rush In.

One of the chief drawbacks at the present time to a more rapid development of the industry in the farming states is the lack of knowledge of good flock management. There is danger in the tendency to rush into this new line of farming, which increased prices have brought about, where experience is lacking. While there is nothing difficult about managing sheep, it must be remembered that sheep breeding is essentially a long-term proposition and not a one-season crop like wheat, corn or oats; and should be entered into with this well in mind if disappointment and failure are be avoided.

Sheep require a small amount high-priced grain compared with ot farm animals. They utilize and thi upon forage crops to a great ext and will make use of rough fe about the farm which other stock not eat. They require a small amo of labor also, which is one reason the increase in the industry in farming states.

The rising prices of wool and m ton since 1914 no doubt have ad further impetus to sheep raising. Si the advance in price began before war, it is fair to assume that the is not to be given all the credit this spirited activity and that the dustry is likely to enjoy contin fair prices for a considerable time er the conclusion of peace.

INDUSTRY INCREASES

Sheep increased 12.6 per cent in the United States from July 1, 1917, to July 1, 1918, according to reports of the bureau of crop estimates of the United States department of agriculture. The estimates of January 1, 1918, show 2.7 per cent more sheep than for the previous year. In 1917 there was a net increase of 2 per cent over 1916. The production of wool also shows that the sheep industry has gathered impetus during recent years. Estimates for 1918 show 257,921,000 pounds of wool were produced, as against 245,573,000 pounds in 1917. This does not include approximately 48,000,000 pounds of pulled wool for each year.

Plenty of Room for Sheep.

There is plenty of room for the e pansion of the sheep industry in th Central and Eastern states, and sp cialists of the United States depar ment of agriculture say that the states can do much to help the we ern range sheep raisers in produci wool and mutton. A survey of the e tire country reveals that there is i mediate opportunity for increasing t sheep population to some extent in t rough and idle lands of the Appal chian region, the cut-over timber lan of Minnesota, Wisconsin, Michiga and the South Atlantic and Gu states. There is also much to be do in improving the carrying capacity many of the farms where sheep a now being raised. The unimprove land in farms, amounting to nearl half of their total area, offers consi erable possibilities for increasing t number of sheep. Much of this lan is now used in a limited way for live stock pastures, while other areas ar wholly idle. They could be made t furnish fair summer grazing for sheep and with slight rearrangement in th cropping system, and the keeping o other live stock, could be made to fur nish winter feed for sheep.

This Is Cottonseed Meal.

Digestible nutrients.—Protein, 37 per cent; carbohydrates and fat, 41.2 per cent.

Cottonseed meal is the richest in protein of all the common cow feeds on the market. It is usually the cheapest source of protein available, but it does not have the best physiological effect upon the cow, often causing digestive troubles if fed in large quantities for long periods. At first it is advisable to start with 1 to 2 pounds a day, gradually increasing the quantity if no bad results are observed. In some herds in the North as high as 5 to 6 pounds a day are fed without bad results. In the South there seems to be no limit in this direction.

Cottonseed meal is a highly concentrated feed and should, if possible, be fed in a mixture with some bulky feed like bran. It can be fed to better advantage when the roughage contains an ample quantity of succulent feed. While its physiological effect in the North at least is not good as compared with most other cow feeds, its cheapness and the fact that in time the cows seem to overcome this tendency to digestive trouble from it are rapidly giving it great prominence as a cheap source of protein for dairy cows.

Swine are grass-eating animals and this fact must be remembered and acted upon in connection with any system of feeding that may be adopted.

LESSON FOR DECEMBER 15

FORGIVES HIS BRETH-

Faith Must Show Itself.

If the church is salt, then the church must be different from the world around it. If the church is light, then the church must be unlike those who have not committed themselves to the leadership of Christ. When Christians say the same things which unbelievers say, and do the same things which scoffers do, they cease to be a leavening force in society. If faith in Christ is to have any meaning, it must show itself in the creation of a new type of man. A Christian should have something in him not to be found in any other human being. Unless he is more in disposition, aim and conduct than those around him, he is not giving the world the impulse or guidance which humanity is in need of.—Broadway Tabernacle Tidings.

Relief Not Burden.

A yoke is not an instrument of torture; it is an instrument of mercy. It is not a malicious contrivance for making work hard; it is a gentle device to make hard labor light. And yet men speak of the yoke of Christ as if it were a slavery, and look upon those who wear it as objects of compassion.

God's Demands.

It is not from severity that God demands much from men in order to obtain knowledge of himself; it is of his kindness that he wills the soul by effort to grow capacious of receiving much that he may give much.—Meister Eckhart.

Abiding in God's Will.

The peace, freedom, and blessedness of all souls consists in their abiding in God's will. Towards this union with God for which it is created the soul strives perpetually.—Meister Eckhart.

—11—

"Is it? Well, no, they didn't tell me that," admitted the visitor, "or I'd not started so late. You see, I come up on a schooner. This here lake boatin' ain't in my line. I'm deep-water, I am."

"So I should s'pose," said Mr. Parlow. "How'd you git up here, anyway?"

"The war," said the visitor. "The war done it. Couldn't git a good berth in any deep-water bottom. So I thought I'd try fresh-water sailin'. I tell you, matey, I been workin' as quartermaster's mate on the old Cross and Crescent line, a-scootin' 'cross to Naples from N'York—there and back—goin' on ten year."

"What did you leave your boat for?" asked the carpenter curiously.

"She was sunk. There's things happenin' over to the other side of the ocean, mate," said the injured man earnestly, "that you wouldn't believe—no, sir! The Cross and Crescent line's give up business till after the war's over, I reckon."

"You'd better not encourage him to talk any more, father," interposed Miss Amanda, coming into the room again. "The best thing he can do for himself is to sleep for a while."

"Thank ye, ma'am," said the sailor humbly. "I'll try."

Darkness came on apace. The sky had become overcast, and there was promise of a stormy night—more snow, perhaps. But Miss Amanda would not allow Carolyn May and Prince to start for home at once.

"Watch for your uncle, Carolyn May, out of the front-room window, and be all ready to go with him when he comes along," said Miss Parlow.

When Uncle Joe came along, Carolyn May ran out and hailed him from the porch.

"Wait for me, Uncle Joe! Wait for me and Princey, please! Just let me get my mittens and Prince's harness and kiss Miss Mandy."

That last she did most soundly, and in full view of the man waiting in the white road.

"Oh, Uncle Joe, I've got just the wonderfulest story to tell you! Shall we harness Prince up again, or will you—"

"I can't wait for the dog, Car'lyn May. I'm in a hurry. You oughtn't to be out in this wind, either. Get aboard your sled, now, and I'll drag you myself," Mr. Stagg interrupted.

CHAPTER X.

A Salt-Sea Flavor.

Swiftly Joseph Stagg trudged toward home, dragging Carolyn May behind him.

"Oh, dear me!" exclaimed the little girl with exultation, "we're all so excited, Uncle Joe!"

"I can see you're all of a-twitter," he returned absent-mindedly. "What's the matter?"

"Oh, you never could guess!" was Carolyn May's introduction, and forthwith, in breathless sentences, went on to tell of her discovery in the snow and about the old sailor now lying asleep on the Parlow couch.

Swiftly Joseph Stagg Trudged Towards Home, Dragging Carolyn May Behind Him.

Of course, when Carolyn May arrived at home, the story had to be told all over again to Aunty Rose Kennedy.

"A mighty plucky youngster, this Car'lyn May of ours," Uncle Joe remarked. "What do you say, Aunty Rose?"

"She is, indeed, Joseph Stagg," agreed the woman.

Carolyn May insisted on going to the Parlow house herself after school the next afternoon to inquire about her "sailor man."

When she had been kissed by Miss Amanda, and Prince had lain down by the kitchen range, the little girl demanded:

"And do tell me how my sailor man is, Miss Mandy. He got such a bump on his head!"

"Yes; the man's wound is really serious. I'm keeping him in bed. But you can go up to see him. He's talked a lot about you, Carolyn May."

The sailor lay in the warm bedroom over the kitchen.

Carolyn May prattled on gayly and soon had her "sailor man" telling all about the sea and ships, and "they that go down therein."

"For, you see," explained Carolyn May, "I'm dreadful cur'ous about the sea. My papa and mamma were lost at sea."

"You don't say so, little miss!" exclaimed the old fellow. "Aye, aye, that's too bad."

Miss Amanda had disappeared, busy about some household matter, and the little girl and the sailor were alone together.

"Yes," Carolyn May proceeded, "it is dreadful hard to feel that it is so."

"Feel that what's so, little miss?" asked the man in bed.

"That my papa and mamma are really drownd-ed," said the little girl with quivering lips. "Some of the folks on their boat were saved. The papers said so."

"Aye, aye!" exclaimed the sailor, his brows puckered into a frown. "Aye, aye, matey! that's allus the way. Why, I was saved myself from a wreck. I was in the first officer's boat, and we in that boat was saved. There was another boat—the purser's, it was—was driftin' about all night with us. We come one time near smashin' into each other and wreckin' both boats. There was a heavy swell on.

"Yet," pursued the sailor, "come daylight, and the fog splittin', we never could find the purser's boat. She had jest as good a chance as us after the steamship sunk. But there it was! We got separated from her, and we was saved, whilst the purser's boat wasn't never heard on again."

"That was dreadful!" sighed the little girl.

"Yes, little miss. And the poor passengers! Purser had twenty or more in his boat. Women mostly. But there was a sick man, too. Why, I helped lower his wife and him into the boat 'fore I was called to go with the first officer in his boat. We was the last to cast off. The purser had jest as good a chance as we did.

"I guess I won't never forgit that time, little miss," went on the seaman, seeing the blue eyes fixed on his face, round with interest. "No! And I've seen some tough times, too.

"The ship was riddled. She had to sink—and it was night.

"There was a sick man I told you about, little miss. He was a wonder, that feller! Cheerful—brave— Don't often see a feller like him. Jokin' to the last, he was. He didn't want to go in the purser's boat, if there was more women or children to go.

"We told him all the women folk had left the ship. So, then, he let me lower him down into the purser's boat after his wife. And that boat had as good a chance as we had, I tell you," repeated the seaman in quite an excited manner.

"Oh, dear me!" exclaimed Carolyn May. "My papa and mamma might have been just like that," she added. "Of course, we don't know whether they got off the steamship at all."

"Aye, aye!" the sailor said. "Pretty tough on you, little miss."

Miss Amanda had come back into the room, and she stood listening to the old man's talk. She said:

"Carolyn May, I think you had better go downstairs now. We mustn't let our patient talk too much. It won't be good for him."

So Carolyn May shook hands with the old sailor and started downstairs ahead of Miss Amanda. The latter lingered a moment to ask a question.

"What was the name of the steamship you were wrecked on?" she asked. "The one you were just telling about."

"She was the Dunraven—the Dunraven, of the Cross and Crescent line," replied the mariner. "Didn't I tell you that before, ma'am?"

CHAPTER XI.

Will Wonders Never Cease?

Again it snowed all night.

It was on the next day, and at noon time, when Mr. Stagg was returning to the store, that a most astounding thing happened.

Mr. Stagg was walking briskly toward Sunrise Cove in his big felt snowboots, such as all men wore in that locality, and was abreast of the Parlow shop and cottage—which he always sought to avoid looking at—when he heard a door open and close.

He tried not to look that way. But his ear told him instantly that the person who had come out was Miss Amanda, rather than her father. Knowing this, how could he help darting a glance at her?

Miss Amanda stood on the porch, looking directly at him.

"Mr. Stagg," she called earnestly, "I must speak to you."

Since the last Sunday when Prince had killed the blacksnake, Miss Amanda had not spoken directly to the hardware merchant in all those hungry years. It rather shocked Joseph Stagg now that she should do so.

"Will you come in?" she urged him, her voice rather tremulous.

There was a moment of absolute silence.

"Bless me! Yes!" ejaculated the hardware man finally.

"I assure you, Mr. Stagg," Miss Amanda said hurriedly, "it is no personal matter that causes me to stop you in this fashion."

"No, ma'am?" responded the man stiffly.

"I want you to come in and speak with this sailor who was hurt," she finally said. "There is something he can tell you, Mr. Stagg, that I think you should know."

The big rocking-chair by the window, in which Miss Amanda's mother had for several years before her death spent her waking hours, was now occupied by the sailor.

"This is the little girl's uncle, Benjamin," Miss Amanda said quietly. "He will be interested in what you have already told me about the loss of the Dunraven. Will you please repeat it all?"

"The Dunraven?" gasped Mr. Stagg, sitting down without being asked. "Hannah—"

"There is no hope, of course," Amanda Parlow spoke up quickly, "that your sister, Mr. Stagg, and her husband were not lost. But having found out that Benjamin was on the steamer with them, I thought you should know. I have warned him to be careful how he speaks before Carolyn May. You may wish to hear the story at first hand."

"We Nigh Bumped Into Each Other After the Dunraven Sunk."

"Thank you," choked Joseph Stagg. He wanted to say more, but could not.

Benjamin Hardy's watery eyes blinked, and he blew his nose.

"Aye, aye, mate!" he rumbled, "hard lines—for a fact. I give my testimony 'fore the consul when we was landed—so did all that was left of us from the Dunraven. Me bein' an unlettered man, they didn't run me very clos't. I can't add much more to it.

"As I say, that purser's boat your sister and her sickly husband was in had jest as good a chance as we had. We nigh bumped into each other soon after the Dunraven sunk. So, then, we pulled off aways from each other. Then the fog rolled up from the African shore—a heap o' fog, mate. It sponged out the lamp in the purser's boat. We never seen no more of 'em—nor heard no more."

"And were Hannah—were my sister and her husband in that boat?" queried Mr. Stagg thoughtfully.

"I am sure, by the details Benjamin has given me," said Miss Amanda softly, "that your sister and Mr. Cameron were two of its passengers."

"Well, it's a long time ago, now," said the hardware dealer. "Surely, if they had been picked up or had reached the coast of Africa, we would have heard about it."

"It would seem so," the woman agreed gently.

"You never know what may happen at sea, mister, till it happens," Benjamin Hardy declared. "What became of that boat—"

He seemed to stick to that idea. But the possibility of the small boat's having escaped seemed utterly preposterous to Mr. Stagg. He arose to depart.

Miss Amanda followed the hardware dealer to the outer door.

"I'm sorry," she said simply.

"Thank—thank you," murmured Joseph Stagg before she closed the door.

He went on to town, his mind strangely disturbed. It was not his sister's fate that filled his heart and brain, but thoughts of Miss Amanda.

She had deliberately broken the silence of years! Of course, it might be attributed to her interest in Carolyn May only, yet the hardware dealer wondered.

Relieved.

At Camp Dodge one night a Swede was on guard duty. Being new to the business, time dragged slowly, but finally the officer with relief came along. The Swede said: "Halt." They halted, and next he said: "Who was dat?" The officer replied: "Officer with relief." The sentry, after waiting several minutes in a vain attempt to recall to mind what he should say, brought forth this startling command: "Dismiss yourselfs and be reconciled." Needless to say the stillness of the night was broken by a roar of laughter.

The Future of the Hun

By E. E. HARRIMAN
of The Vigilantes

There must be a future for the German. He cannot stop and resolve into a mere memory. It is out of the question for the civilized nations to annihilate him. For their own sakes they cannot be as savage as he planned to be. However many were killed in this war, there will still be many millions left to propagate.

What manner of future awaits those millions? What will they do? What will be their status in the world? How will they prosper?

Already many thinking people are considering the matter of German trade, German industry, German debt paying. The nation itself is making active preparations for the after-the-war campaign.

With this war ended Germany will find herself handicapped with a double load: the debts she has incurred through the financing of the war, and the rehabilitation of devastated countries. In order to pay either bill she must be able to manufacture and sell. She must have markets and supply them.

In order to secure markets she must first establish confidence in her wares and in her business methods. She must gain a certain, and very decided, amount of friendly regard or the rival salesmen, the rival manufacturer, will hold too great an advantage. She can only hope to be a scavenger otherwise, for the other nations will leave her only that which they do not wish to handle.

All Nations on Guard.

How is she going to acquire the necessary standing, the confidence of buying nations, to give her these markets? Once she would have sent her thousands of emigrants to colonize, with rigid instructions to demand German goods and thereby create a condition that would force importations. That day is past, for in all such cases Germany's colonial idea carried with it the control of politics through colony ballots. It is inconceivable that any nation should ever again cater to the German vote or allow it to be in control of even a fraction of national activities.

With all nations on guard against Germanizing influences, that plan must be abandoned. If Germany, in her stupid disregard of all rights and prejudices, should attempt to again get control of any part of the national affairs of America or Canada or Brazil, for instance, it will probably lead to the barring of intercourse with her definitely.

It is difficult to ascertain where she can first gain a foothold. With her reputation blackened by her own acts, her rotten methods thoroughly exposed, it will be a hazardous thing for any nation to attempt to deal with her.

It is a matter that calls for the sober, calm study of master minds, the consideration of all nations opposed to Germanic ideas. It must be made a matter of the most careful consideration, for upon the policy adopted by the nations will depend much of their own welfare. There must be a limit set for Teutonic activity, a bound beyond which they dare not go or it will be only a question of time until the world will again have to take up the task of beating Hun devilishness.

It is time for the nations and their deepest thinkers to begin to plan and consider, for it will not be long now until the Hun will be wanting to emigrate from Hunland to escape the burdens he has helped to create. He must not be allowed to shirk his task. He must be the one to pick up the burden and stagger along under it. He must not be allowed to shift it to other shoulders, in part or in entirety.

Must Be Kept Under Surveillance.

The forces of many nations have been harnessed in the effort to hammer some reasonable degree of sense into the Hunnish head. Next will come the prodigious effort to hold him to his work and force him to walk the straight and narrow path. It is to be almost as hard a task as fighting him into submission, if the way he is preparing for a commercial campaign is any criterion.

Unless he is so hedged about by rigid, inflexible guards that he can do only the right thing, he will soon be doing the wrong one. It is folly to think that getting a whipping will change the Hun nature. A cracked crown will not ensure a rejuvenation or any degree of reformation. He will be no more spiritually redeemed than he will be physically restored by the war. The living Hun will need a process of refining that will require more than one generation. The dead Hun, thank God, will help to hold him where he belongs by the thinning out of evil blood when he died.

So let us plan now for what comes later, that we may enjoy life with no fear of despotic oppression in the future years. We must weld a steel ring, such as Kaiser Wilhelm loved to have about, that will keep the Prussian on his good behavior for the next two thousand years. In that length of time, the world of decency may make some progress toward the elimination of the savage part in his nature, and so bring him to where he is a safe neighbor for decent people.

Making Our Flag Beloved

By HAMLIN GARLAND
of The Vigilantes

Among the victims of the measureless ruin which the Prussian militarists have wrought in their desire to dominate the world, Armenia and Syria have high claim to our sympathy. Suffering the full horror of the conquered they have been isolated from the allies who would have helped them if they could. Turkey, the partner of Germany and the cause of the suffering and desolation of the Armenians, is now conquered and it is possible for America to rescue the despairing and the hungry in those lands.

This is a duty which we cannot regretfully postpone. We are and must continue to be the storehouse of the world. Our resources must be put to the use of those who suffer. France and England, in spite of their almost inconceivable war burdens, are each doing their part in the work of freeing and feeding the oppressed. We should not fail of a ready and full co-operation.

Today the War Is Won.

Thus far we have not felt in any degree the pinch of the war—we have hardly been incommoded. We have saved sugar and meat and flour and submitted to restrictions in other ways, but we have not suffered in the slightest the pain and the grief of other countries. The sacrifices we have made seem very small and very poor in comparison with what Belgium and Poland and other equally innocent bystanders have endured.

Today the war is won—we can seize our great opportunity. We have made our flag respected by the valor of our sailors and soldiers, now let us make it beloved by the wise use of our almost limitless wealth. How great, how peaceful the United States seems as we read the reports from the scourged and desolated lands of the East. From our plenty we must instantly send in order that hunger shall not end in starvation and that a whole people shall not vanish from the earth.

Germany has narrowed its field; as its allies retire they leave a multitude of homeless and famishing victims behind—they have no care for the ruined and the desolate—and America must step in to aid till such time as the oppressor can be forced to indemnify and restore.

It is not necessary for me to rehearse the ghastly story of Turko-Prussian barbaric cruelties—that has been done full and most movingly by others. My part is to plead with those who have a surplus that they may heal the sick, and house the helpless women and children in the wake of the Turkish armies.

Greatest Opportunity to Help.

The committee for Armenian and Syrian relief is asking for a fund of $30,000,000. This seems but a small amount when set over against the non-Mohammedan populations of the countries named in the appeal, and yet the committee assures us that this sum will have the most enormous power of alleviation. It will not restore but it will provide the necessities of life to those who are for the moment unable to feed and clothe themselves.

Every man who gives to this fund will have the satisfaction of knowing that each dollar of his gift goes straight to its mark, affording almost instant relief to some poor soul who is physically suffering and in despair of the future. To send this relief will prove to them, and to the rest of the world, that we, the richest of nations, can be upon demand the most generous of nations. If we do our part at this time we can make the Stars and Stripes not only respected, but beautiful in the eyes of the citizens of those faraway lands. It will seem the sign of pity and of healing, the symbol of hope and peace which our forefathers intended it to be.

THE POETS TO FRANCE

By THEODOSIA GARRISON
of the Vigilantes.

We cannot name you save upon our knees—
France! France! what fitting tribute may we bring
That would not seem a pitiful, poor thing
Against your splendor and your agonies—
You who withstood the strength of iron seas—
A rock wherefrom God's beacon still shall fling
The light that brings a world from shipwrecking,
Seeing by you it steers its argosies!

France! France! there are no words to make your song—
There is no song wherewith to honor you;
But note by note through many centuries
Shall rise the perfect tribute clear and strong,
Giving your fame at last the singing due.
We cannot name you save upon our knees.

CAT'S PAWS

(In Teutonic Diplomacy)

By EDITH M. THOMAS,
of the Vigilantes.

When Highest Beings* cat's-paws choose
To pull their chestnuts from the fire,
The cat's-paw never dares refuse
To do what overlords require.

But if not well it does its task,
To meet the overlord's desire,
What happens then?—No need to ask—
He throws the cat into the fire!

'Tis well this lesson should be learnt
Of Highest Beings' ways and aims—
If their own fingers are not burnt,
They care not for a world in flames!

Temperance Notes

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

HOW ALCOHOL ENSLAVES.

"Why should the drinking of alcoholic beverages be habit-forming and not the drinking of soda or milk? What, if anything, makes alcohol different than any other substance in this respect?"

In a recent number of American Medicine, Dr. Carl Scheffel of Boston presents these questions. He answers them thus:

"In the formation of the drink-habit the same mental factors play an important role as in the formation of any other habit, but in the addiction to alcohol these normal psychological factors are tremendously influenced by the toxic action of alcohol itself, in that it narcotizes certain brain structures and interferes with their normal functions in a very definite manner. . . . Under these circumstances the mind can no longer be considered as sound, for the controlling ideas are no longer able to inhibit opposite ideas and there is great danger of chance intrusions entering consciousness to the detriment of the individual.

"In drunkenness the person's field of consciousness has been greatly diminished by the toxic action of alcohol, and in hypnotism the same mental state has been produced by the suggestions of the operator. In drunkenness the subject is controlled by the sight, smell, taste, and desire for alcohol, just as the hypnotized subject is controlled by the verbal or written suggestions of the operator. . . .

"The intemperate man finds in alcohol a desire and temptation that he cannot overcome alone and unaided. Once alcohol has become master of the personality, the threshold stimulus required for its subsequent indulgence has become greatly lowered, and as repeated actions have accumulative influence, a man may easily become a chronic alcoholic."

DRINKING WINE.

"'You must drink wine in France' is an injunction that enjoins," says Association Men, organ of the Young Men's Christian association. "There is little difficulty and less expense in getting water that is pure or can be made safe by boiling or filtering, and that is cheaper and safer than the 'plain red wine of the country.' Every American camp has its properly protected water supply. One of the most pernicious hallucinations that has ever struck men going over to France is that they must change their habits, their principles and their way of thinking, when they reach continental Europe. No man will be handicapped by puritanical habits. Our men who have been in France for months come back robust and strong who have never touched wine. Bishop McConnell and others declare that this talk about the necessity of drinking wine is all tommy rot. When a man breaks from the settled habits of his lifetime, drops the standards that he has stood by, whether it is wine drinking, cigarette smoking, clean speech or stern standards, he loses his grip on other men as well as himself. No man can put on religion as he puts on a cloak in France. It has got to be the genuine thing or it is soon discovered and despised. The strain of the work and the temptations of the country overcome him—and to which more than one man has fallen," says Association Men, organ of the Young Men's Christian association.

BOOZE INSTEAD OF BREAD.

The New York Tribune gives the following figures showing the amount of food sacrificed to drink during one year:

Four million people could have been supplied with rye bread for 100 days.

Fifty-six million people could have been supplied with cornmeal for 100 days.

Sixteen million people could have been supplied with rice for 100 days.

One hundred million people could have been supplied with 18 pounds of rice each.

One hundred million people could have been supplied with one gallon of molasses each.

Two hundred and eight million two hundred thousand loaves of bread could have been made from the rye.

PROHIBITION CITIES LEAD THE NATION IN BANK INCREASES.

Bradstreet's report of bank clearings in 100 cities shows prohibition cities well in the lead in the rate of increase. The list is headed by Tulsa with a percentage of increase of 85; after it comes Muskogee with 70, Oklahoma City with 60.3, Atlanta with 59.5, Richmond with 54, Wichita with 49.2, Denver with 43.4. The highest wet city is St. Joseph, with 41.3, which is eighth in the list.

A CAUSE FOR PROHIBITION.

"The material ruin of tens of thousands of families," says Archbishop Messmer, "and the moral ruin of tens of thousands of young men and women can be traced to the saloon. It is this universal fact, not fanaticism, that has caused a tidal wave of prohibition to roll over the land."

A nation that can borrow of its citizens nine billion dollars in a year does not need to dicker with brewers, distillers or liquor dealers for money to carry on the war.—The Commoner.

Biliousness

WHEN you have a bilious attack your liver fails to perform its functions. You become constipated. The food you eat ferments in your stomach instead of digesting. This inflames the stomach and causes nausea, vomiting and a terrible headache. Take Chamberlain's Tablets. They will tone up your liver, clean out your stomach and you will soon be as well as ever. There is nothing better.

AN AMERICAN RED CROSS TRUCK BRINGING CASES OF TOBACCO FOR OUR SOLDIERS AT THE FRONT.

BEST CHRISTMAS GIFT.

What finer Christmas gift could the American people give to a stricken world than the announcement on Christmas Eve that the entire nation has answered the Red Cross Christmas Roll Call. It would signify to the starving, sick and homeless that our humanity does not depend upon the excitement of war, but that neighborliness is just as strong in us in times of peace. A unanimous response will hearten the whole world.

Millions Making Cough Medicine at Home and Saving 400 Per Cent.

Why Pay an Extra Price When You Can Get Glando Pine —Same Quality, Same Quantity—and at the Same Old Price?

For 50c you can get 8 ounces of Glando Pine. Mix it with good syrup or strained honey enough to make a pint, and you will have the best cough medicine you ever used. It can't be beat for coughs, colds, hoarseness, throat irritation or croup. Glando Pine relieves the spasmodic coughing in whooping cough. Children love to take it. To prevent a cold from developing into pneumonia or bronchitis, hold a teaspoonful of Glando Pine well back in the mouth and take a few deep breaths before swallowing it. You can feel the air cells opening up and you will breathe deep and easy.

Mrs. W. M. J Feders, of Lima, Ohio, says: "I took cold, which developed into a severe cough. It hung on for several months. I coughed terribly, especially at night. I lived in a flat and my neighbors, believing me to have tuberculosis, asked the owner of the flat to have me move out, which he did. I used different remedies, but found no relief until I used Glando Pine. The first dose seemed to help me. I began gaining flesh: and by the time I had used two bottles, my cough was gone. Over a year has passed and my cough has not returned. I believe Glando Pine saved my life."

Glando Pine is manufactured by the Gland-Aid Co., Fort Wayne, Ind.

Engineer Evans Dead.

The funeral of Allen A. Evans, a B. & O. engineer and a former resident of St. Joe was held at the family residence in Garrett, Sunday.

Mr. Evans was sixty-two years old and his death, which came last Thursday morning, was caused by Bright's disease. He had been unable to work at his occupatian of passenger engineer for a year.

Mr. Evans was born near Orangeville, Ill., and when he came to Garrett he became a locomotive fireman. Seven years later he was promoted to engineer and for many years he was in charge of passenger trains. He was a very successful engineer. In thirty-one years as engineer he was never blamed for a single accident and to his knowledge never struck a human being with his engine.

In 1897 Mr. Evans slipped and fell on the track at South Chicago. His left hip was broken at the joint and he was permanently crippled. In 1905 while on a fast passenger train he thought he was going to collide with a freight train. He jumped and was hurled into a barbed wire fence. He was in the hospital three months.

Mr. Evans is survived by the widow and one son, Raymond Evans, of Garrett, and one sister, Mrs. J. R. Gelhausen, of Garrett.

In New Quarters

The St Joe Valley Bank is now located in its new home, having moved over from the Curie building, Friday. The new rooms are well adapted to the banking business and its patrons will find everything there for their convenience—that is, as soon as everything can be straightened up. Messrs. Bowman and Maxwell will welcome you.

Drug Store Coming

Chas. H. Rice, of Markle, Ind., was in town, Tuesday, making arrangements to bring a drug store to St. Joe. He has secured the east room of the opera house building and expects to get here by the middle of January. Mr. Rice is a young man of pleasing appearance and he says St. Joe looks good to him. The town will give him a cordial welcome.

DO YOU KNOW?

Red Cross Christmas Roll Call

December 16th to 23rd

Do you know the Red Cross Christmas Roll Call? Do you know when it's going to be? Do you know it's the call of our brothers, who are far away, over the sea? Do you know that if you answer "present" you'll be helping some boy over there, and you'll show that you're backing our soldiers and willing to do your full share? Do you know that to millions of children this sign of a haven, indeed, for they know it means food, clothing, shelter and love to supply every need? Do you know what the millions of members all over our well-beloved land have been able to do through the Red Cross in offering a kind, helping hand? Will you answer "I'm here" to the roll call? Will you be a member this year? If you will you'll receive the "love button"—a token of Christmas good cheer.

MAKE ROLL CALL UNANIMOUS.

The official designation, and the only proper characterization of the demonstration that will occupy the attention of the American people, under the auspices of the American Red Cross immediately preceding the coming holiday season, is "The Red Cross Christmas Roll Call."

The object of the Christmas Roll Call is to register in terms of active participation the spirit of a nation. The spirit in question is personified in Red Cross membership. It is not to be a "campaign" to raise a war fund nor a "drive" to strengthen the material resources of the Red Cross organization. Its main objective is the extension of Red Cross membership to the uttermost limit.

See to it that no false conception of the purpose of the Roll Call finds lodgment anywhere, and, while emphasizing the grandeur of the movement under its only logical name, keep everlastingly in mind the idea to—"Make it unanimous."

NEW FACES FOR OLD.

The American Red Cross has undertaken varied tasks. These range from darning the socks of the soldiers to making new faces for those disfigured by war. Mrs. Ladd, the wife of Dr. Ladd, now doing service in Red Cross hospitals abroad, is working in her Paris studio making masks to cover disfigured faces. A photograph of the soldier showing how he looked before being wounded is obtained and then a mask of copper or silver is made to resemble it and replace the part that is gone. This is made as lifelike as possible and held on, as a rule, with bows behind the ears like spectacles. The soldier cannot eat or sleep in these masks, but he can see and breathe through them. Sometimes a nose is put on so lifelike that it cannot be detected, and sometimes it is a chin or in rare instances almost the entire face. This great humanitarian work enables the victim to mingle with people without being made conspicuous or conscious that he is being avoided.

WHAT HOME SERVICE MEANS.

So many questions are constantly coming to the Home Service Section of the Red Cross that a few words as to its objects may not come amiss. The Home Service Section aims to serve the folks at home, to bring them nearer to the field, and to bring him nearer to the ones at home. Sometimes it means helping to straighten out a financial tangle, sometimes help in the training of the children, sometimes being a big brother to a young lad who needs a bit of friendly counsel, or advising a young wife who may be worried about the coming due of the mortgage and what her rights under the law may be.

Then, too, there are sometimes delays in the mails or lost letters, and sometimes delays in the allotment, or errors in the amount which should be forthcoming. These problems and many others are being straightened out by the Home Service Section, without charge to the families, and with an efficiency which is daily growing more valuable. More than 300,000 calls have been answered.

For those who are worried because of the non-arrival of letters a cable is sent inquiring about the man's welfare.

In fact the Home Service Section is living up to its name—it is really the service of those at home—it is trying to be the father, brother or husband to those left behind.

FRENCH AUTHORITIES ACCLAIM WORK OF AMERICAN RED CROSS.

Dr. Chassaigne of the French Military Sanitary Service and M. Goyon in recent addresses paid warm tribute to the work of the American Red Cross in the war, and M. Autrand, prefect of the Department of the Seine, praised the personal efforts of Red Cross workers.

"Your task is not ended," said M. Autrand. "Our friends and our benefactors now are more than ever indispensable to us. Our task is immense. Help us. We have known how to vanquish; we will know how to organize ourselves in victory."

Fifteen Million Tons of Shipping

Building 15,000,000 tons of shipping is the big job laid out for American Shipyards. It will take years to do this. Men working in shipyards are assured of steady jobs if they make good. This great fleet of ships must be built. The United States is going to become the first maritime nation of the world.

We need men accustomed to out-of-doors work to help us build ships. The pay is set by the Emergency Fleet Corporation under direct Government control, and is higher than ever before in the history of the industry. Do not hesitate because you have never worked in a shipyard before. We will train you for some good job and will pay you well while you are learning.

It will take us years to build our share of 15,000,000 tons.

A shipyard is the ideal place to make good money this winter. Get in touch with us, either by calling at yard or by writing to us immediately. Some of our best jobs are open right now. Great Lakes Engineering Works, River Rouge and Detroit, Mich.—Adv.

"The people of DeKalb County certainly are to be congratulated to have the opportunity again to have a Short Course this winter, similar, but much better, than the one held at the county seat some five years ago This is all the more so after having passed through such a time of stress, exertion and anxiety, and having so nobly and patriotically even more than fulfilled the demands that necessarily had to be made of us. A better acquaintance with each other, a spirit of greater sympathy and helpfulness toward each other, unselfishly working for the common interests of the country are the manifestations of gratefulness found on every hand. This opportunity to bring these things about is offered admirably in having the Short Course, therefore I should be much pleased to have representatives from all parts of the county meet with Prof. Frier, Friday evening, December 20, at 7:30, to make the necessary arrangements to obtain this Short Course for DeKalb Co." A Letter from France

On Active Service with the American Expeditionary Force

My Dear Mrs. Langley:

Received your letter and booklet this morning, and am replying immediately as conditions are not always opportune for writing letters. Have been so busy that I have failed to write the majority of my friends.

Since leaving "The States" have traveled approximately 5,000 miles and have seen parts of Ireland, Scotland and I have traveled through most of England. I was not sea sick on the Atlantic, but when I crossed the English Channell I caught a severe attack of mal der mer, consequently when I arrived in France, my condition physically was rather unstable.

However, I am in excellent physical condition now and am in good spirits. Have not been homesick over here yet. Would like very much to go in detail about conditions here, but it is impossible, due to the rigid censorship.

I may say that I have seen many wonderful things.

France is a very nice country, and her people are quick to acclaim their appreciation of the American soldiers; their gratitude is in some cases pathetic. One may be sure that the future will always find the United States and France inseparably bound.

Have been through some fine old Chateau's, they are very interesting.

Is Ft. Wayne dull now? It surely must be for most of her young men have gone.

It is hardly necessary for me to say that I was pleased to recieve a letter from you, as I always remember you and also your father, as among my oldest friends.

Peace will soon be concluded, in my opinion. I am very glad that I was sent over seas, as it is surely a great privilege to take an active part in the greatest war in history.

Do not forget especially to give them (your father and mother) my regards. You are assured of my appreciation of your remembrance of me. It is especially nice to be remembered at such a period and crisis in ones' life. Write again.

NO ONE SUFFERED HERE.

The marvel of our voluntary food-saving, now that we are "getting results," is that no one ever actually suffered any hardship from it; that we all are better in health and spirit and better satisfied with ourselves because of our friendly self-denial.

Food control in America held the price of breadstuffs steady, prevented vicious speculation and extortion and preserved tranquillity at home.

In no other nation is there so willing a sense of voluntary self-sacrifice as in America—that was shown in the abstinence from wheat.

Find more wheat, it came; more pork, it came; save sugar, it was done. So Americans answered the challenge of German starvation.

Good will rules the new world as fear governed the old world. Through sharing food America helps make the whole world kin.

Food control made sufficiency from shortage, kept the rein on food prices, gave the nation's full strength exercise.

Starvation by Germany challenged all the world; food conservation in America answered the challenge.

Food conservation in America has been the triumph of individual devotion to the national cause.

MAKE YOUR FUTURE SECURE

Easy Farming Methods in Western Canada and Certain Financial Benefits.

With your crop harvested and marketed, with the disposal of your cattle and hogs completed, you are ready to prepare your financial statement for the year. You will soon know what you have gained, and if the gain made in your farming operatons has been up to your expectations and will meet your requirements. Probably you may have been the loser. Your land may have been productive, but it may have been too high priced. The cost of production has been too great. If you have had the remuneration you sought and are satisfied this article may not interest you. If your returns have not been satisfactory, or if your ambition leads you to the laudable desire of bettering your condition, if you have dependents for whose future you have anxiety, you will naturally look around for some place, some opportunity that offers greater advantages and brings satisfactory returns. To the north and west of you lie hundreds of thousands of unbroken acres in Western Canada awaiting the husbandman, and ready to give of its richness to place you where you desire to be placed. For thousands of farmers from nearly every state in the Union the prairies of Western Canada have afforded wealth beyond what they had been led to expect. The excellence of the soil of Western Canada, which comprises the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, can only partially be told by the knowledge of some facts.

Every year for some years past the world's highest prizes for wheat, oats and barley have been carried off by grain grown on Western Canadian Prairies. Beef fattened on the grasses of these same prairies recently brought the highest prices ever paid on the Chicago market. Throughout the entire world the quality of Canadian grain, and Canadian beef and mutton, is recognized. To recite what individual farmers have done, the riches they have acquired would fill volumes. The case of James Wishart of Portage la Prairie is not an exceptional one. His wheat crop this past season yielded him forty-five bushels per acre, and the land upon which it was grown was broken forty-four years ago, and it has been continuously under crop except for an occasional summer fallow. At Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan, samples of the wheat of 1918 weighed 68 pounds to the bushel, others 66 and some 65½ pounds. Wheat crops, at Coaldale, Alberta, went as high as 38 bushels acre, while wheat crops near Barons, Alberta, had yields of from 25 to 30 bushels.

Records such as these speak in glowing terms of the excellence of the soil of Western Canada.

The war is over, and we are all settling down to a peace basis. There is a great world beyond the seas to feed and clothe, and thus is afforded the opportunity to lend a hand in the great work. Aside from the philanthropy in which you can play a part, there is the satisfaction of knowing you are amply providing for yourself and for the future of those who may be dependent upon you. Greater progress can be made in this and your own development by availing yourself of the advantages that Western Canada offers in its low-priced lands and high yielding values. There are good schools, desirable social conditions, low taxation (none on improvements) with an enjoyable climate, and the satisfaction of possessing a well tilled soil capable of producing abundant crops for which good prices prevail, at easily accessible marketing places.—Advertisement.

Dick Was Charitable.

At the funeral services for an elderly negro of Richmond, Va., the following colloquy was overheard:

"There ain't no use in talkin'," said Mose Barker; "Dick Williams, he was the most charitable man dis town ever seen."

"I reckon dat's so," said the darkey to whom Mr. Barker imparted this information. And he paused as if waiting for evidence on this point.

"Yessuh," continued Mr. Barker, "Dick Williams, he always owned a plug hat, and durin' my time I ain't never heard that Dick ever refused to lend dat hat to anybody."

Dog Had Something to Say.

The Hon. John W. Davis, appointed our ambassador in London in succession to Mr. Page, is an eminent lawyer.

Mr. Davis tells the story of a very small boy who was trying to lead a big St. Bernard up a busy thoroughfare. "Where are you going to take that dog, my little chap?" inquired a passerby. "I—I'm going to see where—where he wants to go first," was the breathless reply.

Relics of Aztecan Era.

Near Phoenix, within the Salt river valley, are to be found seven communal settlements of the same pre-Aztecan era, with central buildings that were far larger than that at Casa Grande, a writer in the Christian Science Monitor states. To the northward and northeast every river valley retains evidence of the passage of at least a portion of these peoples, for some reason leaving their cities and their irrigated fields on the plains and seeking the mountains and the upper plateaus.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Teacher of English Bible in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1918, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR DECEMBER 22

THE BIRTH OF JESUS.

LESSON TEXT—Luke 2:8-20.

GOLDEN TEXT—For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior who is Christ the Lord.—Luke 2:11.

Note: Since the lesson committee has suggested the birth of Jesus, a Christmas lesson, as an alternative for this day, doubtless for most classes it will be desirable to use the Christmas lesson and substitute the alternative lesson for the review on December 29.

The birth of the Saviour occurred at a most propitious time. The need was great, for the systems of morals and religion were tottering upon their foundations. It was also a time of great opportunity, for the whole world was under one rule, making it possible for evangelists to go from city to city and country to country without fear or molestation. The place of his birth was Bethlehem, as the prophet had foretold some seven hundred years before (Micah 5:2). God permitted the emperor to enforce a decree of taxation just at the time to cause Mary to be at Bethlehem when she gave birth to the Saviour. That which the Word of God has announced shall most surely come to pass, though its fulfillment seem most unlikely and unreasonable. The surroundings of his birth were the most humble sort. The Almighty Creator condescended to take upon himself humanity—to be born in a manger, becoming the poorest of the poor that none might be hindered from coming to him.

I. The Saviour's Birth Announced (2:8-14).

1. To Whom—Shepherds (v. 8). In the first Christmas service the audience was composed of humble shepherds. The glorious gospel message was first sounded forth to these humble men while watching over their flocks by night. Poverty is no barrier to the reception of the gospel message. God does not reveal himself mainly to the princes and great men of the earth. "Hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom?" (James 2:5). Neither did their devotion to their calling exclude them from this greatest favor of God. Moses, Gideon, Amos and Elisha were called by the Lord from the busy activities of life. He never calls the idle. The Lord has no use for a lazy man. The working man is God's peculiar interest.

2. By Whom—The Angel of the Lord (v. 9). The first gospel sermon was delivered by the angel of the Lord. Angels, the exalted ministers of God are interested in men (Hebrews 1:14), and this one announced unto men God's plan of salvation. These beings no doubt sincerely sympathized with poor, sin-cursed, fallen men.

3. The Message—Good Tidings (v. 10). (1) A Saviour is born. Surely this was a gladsome message. Heathen darkness which had so long cursed the earth was beginning to vanish. The casting out of Satan, the prince of the world, was about to take place (John 12:31). Liberty was about to be proclaimed to those in bondage to sin. The way of salvation was about to be opened to all. So glorious was this news that a multitude of the heavenly host accompanied this announcement with their song of praise. It is through Jesus Christ that God's kindness and good will are made known to man. (2) Peace (v. 14). Peace with God—peace of heart—peace with man. How incongruous this message with our time! The world war was the result of not receiving this blessed message. (3) Joy (v. 10). The gospel message is a joyful message because it frees from sin and removes all the burdens of this world.

II. The Shepherds Make Investigation (2:15, 16).

Though these things seemed passing strange to them they did not stop to question or argue; they went straight to Bethlehem and found everything just as the angels had said. They had the glorious privilege of gazing upon the world's Saviour—the very Lord of glory.

III. The Shepherds Witnessing (2:17).

When they saw the Lord they could not remain silent. They were impelled to make known abroad the good news. Those who have heard the good news of salvation through Christ and have verified it by personal investigation must tell it to others. The angels said that the good tidings of great joy should be to all people (v. 10). The gospel of Christ is for all people regardless of nationality or condition. It is just as really good news to the king as to the peasant. It fills the hearts of all with joy.

IV. The Shepherds Praising God (2:18-20).

The testimony of the shepherds had a varying effect—some wondered, and others kept the sayings and pondered them, but the shepherds went back glorifying and praising God for all they had seen and heard. Those who have believed the gospel message and proclaimed it abroad have a peculiar joy which must express itself in praises to God.

SCRAPS of HUMOR

Leading Up to Sentiment.

"What is your favorite poem?" asked the young man.

"'Gray's Elegy,'" replied the young woman.

"Is it—er—that is to say—do you recite it?"

"No. I just said that to fool you. You thought I was going to mention 'Omar Khayyam' so that you could lead up to that 'book of verse, jug and loaf' stanza."

Sure, He Is.

Mrs. Gabbalot—What caused the trouble between the Meekleys?

Mrs. Gadabout—His wife called him a beast.

"Mrs. Gabbalot—What! Called that poor, mild-mannered little man a beast?

Mrs. Gadabout—Sure; she meant he was a beast of burden.

Everybody's Doin' It.

"Well, things look pretty favorable for the allies, don't you think so?" asked the well-met feller.

"Personally, I do," responded the cautious citizen, "but I do not like to express myself positively till I get a chance to discuss the situation with the janitor, the office boy and the stenographer."

A Reformed Slacker.

"Which have you been doing?" asked Meandering Mike; "working or fighting?"

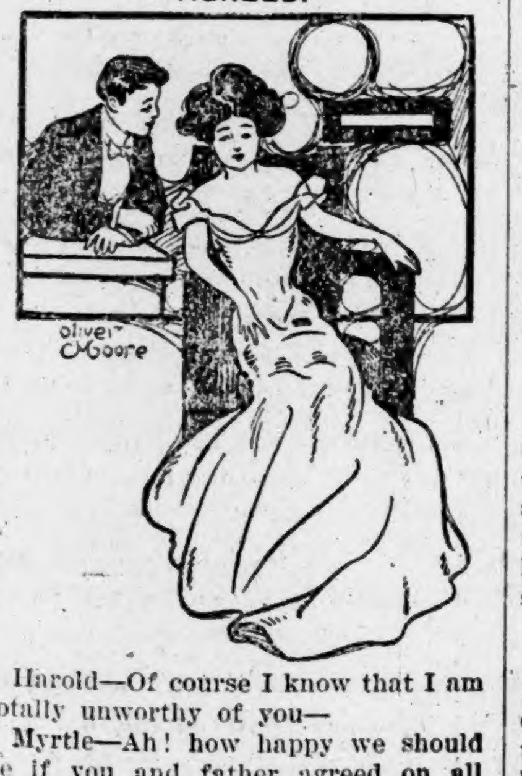
"I dunno," replied Plodding Pete; "when I fight I'm so busy it's de same as work an' when I work I'm so mad dat it seems jes' de same as fightin'."

Suspicious.

Bess—Is he all right?"

June—He uses wretchedly good grammar for a college man. I don't believe he is right.

AGREED.



Harold—Of course I know that I am totally unworthy of you—

Myrtle—Ah! how happy we should be if you and father agreed on all points as you do on this one.

The Test.

Jen thought her face was very fair;
Her ma thought Jennie's beauty rare.
She took a crowded car one day—
And had to stand up all the way.

Not Playing.

"I understand you have quit playing the stock market."

"Never did play it. I merely supplied some cash and kept books while somebody else had all the fun."

Then Pa Subsided.

Stern Father—See here, young man; who do you think is boss around here—you or I?

The Young Miscreant—S-h-h-h, pa. Mother is in the next room.

A Good Speech.

"Did he make a good speech?"

"Fine. He admitted he had nothing to say and then didn't try to say it."

Sure Proof.

He—You are crazy about bargains. Did you ever really get a cheap thing?

She—Sure I did, when I married you.

The Safest Way.

Clerk—Can't I sell you a burglar alarm?

Jones—No, thanks! If a burglar calls I prefer to remain asleep.

A Strangle Hold.

"You know Al Strong, the wrestler?"

"Yes; what about him?"

"Well, he's lost the championship."

"You don't say?"

"Yes, his girl threw him down!"—Cartoons Magazine.

Some Argument.

Irate Parent—You can get rid of money faster than any man I know.

Son—True, dad; but listen: By getting rid of it quickly I save lots of time, and time, you know, is money.

Women all over the world realize more and more that their work at home helped the men at the Front. It involved great sacrifices, hard work and unusual physical strength. Women at home should study nursing for the home. A good way to learn is to ask your druggist for a copy or send 50c to publishers of the "Medical Adviser," 663 Main St., Buffalo, N. Y., and get a copy of their 1,000 page book bound in cloth, with chapters on First Aid, Taking Care of the Sick or Wounded, Physiology, Hygiene, Anatomy, Sex Problems, Mother and Babe. Nobody, man or woman, can do good work when health is impaired. If a woman is nervous or has dizzy spells, suffers from awful pains at regular or irregular intervals she should turn to a tonic made up of herbs, and without alcohol, which makes weak women strong and sick women well. It is Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. Send Dr. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y., 10 cents for trial package.

Kokomo, Ind.—"I can say something for Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. For sometime I suffered from nervousness and general run-down condition. I lost my appetite and the doctors did not seem to help me. I had one of Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Advisers in the house for about seven years and I started to read it. I found that 'Favorite Prescription' was what I needed and thought I would try it. It helped me in many ways and built up my system. I regained my appetite and felt better. It gave me the strength to do work that I had not been able to do for some time previous. I can recommend the 'Prescription' to others."

HUNS' DIRTY TRICK AVENGED

No Member of Party Lived to Tell of "Sniping" Yanks While on Errand of Mercy.

"The body of a dead Yank," Private Albert Hawk said, "lay in No Man's Land in front of our lines. The Huns tied ropes to the hands of the dead soldier, and by pulling the ropes made it appear that the soldier was alive and waving his arms to summon help.

"A dozen of our men crawled out to help their supposedly wounded comrade. As they approached the soldier's body, Hun snipers picked them off. Half a dozen brave men had fallen before the trick was discovered.

"Forty of us charged at that sniper's nest with baynets. We didn't even think about the danger, and didn't care a rap.

"We found eight German snipers in that nest and not one of them escaped. We drove our bayonets into them.

TOWN FATHERS KEPT BUSY

Municipal Authorities of Danzig, Germany, Seem to Have Had a Hand in About Everything.

Fraulein Gertrude Baumer, in the diary which she contributes to Die Hilfe, notes the following from an official memorandum issued at Danzig:

"The town deals in coal, babies' soothers, methylated spirits and petroleum, old clothes and wooden soles; it fattens pigs and geese and breeds fowls and rabbits; it cooks dinner and supper every day for many thousands of people; it provides labor and horses, distributes prizes for horse breeding, and places orders for army supplies; it estimates the harvest and counts the cattle, extracts fat from bone, and sells vegetables and fruit in certain shops; it dries vegetables and makes sausages; it allots land for potato and vegetable growing, and itself cultivates land; it collects or organizes the collection of nettles and fruit stones; it buys wood in Germany and in the occupied territory; it kills beasts and makes jam, examines applications for leave from the front, and provides the farmers with manure; it revises the prices of bread, matches, meat, boots and various foods, catches fish, and supplies machinery; it collects copper, aluminum and brass; and it distributes sugar for jam making, and regulates the feeding of sick persons and babies."

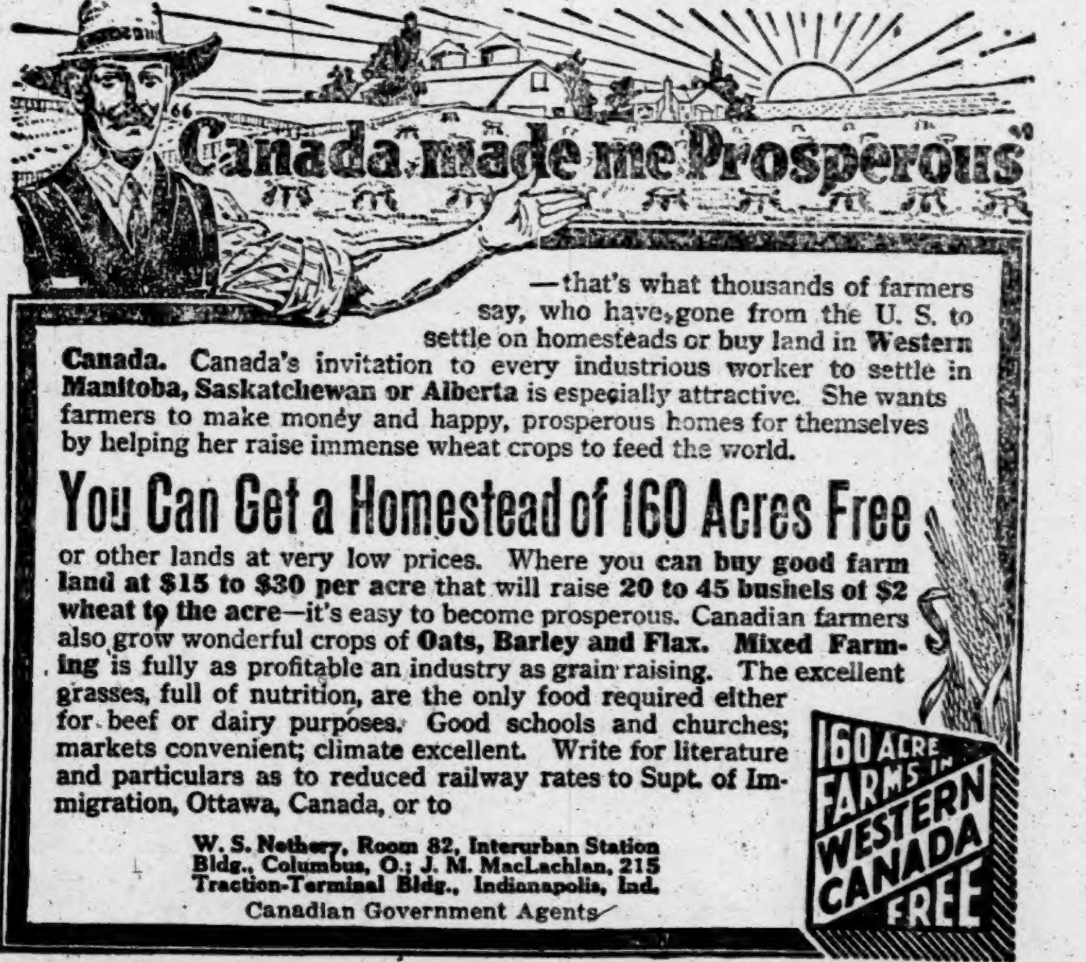
HAARLEM OIL CAPSULES IF YOUR BACK ACHES

Do you feel tired and "worn-out?" Are you nervous and irritable? Don't sleep well at night? Have a "dragged out," unrested feeling when you get up in the morning? Dizzy spells? Bilious? Bad taste in the mouth, backache, pain or soreness in the loins, and abdomen? Severe distress when urinating, bloody, cloudy urine or sediment? All these indicate gravel or stone in the bladder, or that the poisonous microbes, which are always in your system, have attacked your kidneys.

You should use GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules immediately. The oil soaks gently into the walls and lining of the kidneys, and the little poisonous animal germs, which are causing the inflammation, are immediately attacked and chased out of your system without inconvenience or pain.

Don't ignore the "little pains and aches," especially backaches. They may be little now but there is no telling how soon a dangerous or fatal disease of which they are the forerunners may show itself. Go after the cause of that backache at once, or you may find yourself in the grip of an incurable disease.

Do not delay a minute. Go to your druggist and insist on his supplying you with a box of GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules. In 24 hours you will feel renewed health and vigor. After you have cured yourself, continue to take one or two Capsules each day so as to keep in first-class condition, and ward off the danger of future attacks. Money refunded if they do not help you. Ask for the original imported GOLD MEDAL brand, and thus be sure of getting the genuine.—Adv.



"Canada made me Prosperous"
160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

—that's what thousands of farmers say, who have gone from the U. S. to settle on homesteads or buy land in Western Canada. Canada's invitation to every industrious worker to settle in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta is especially attractive. She wants farmers to make money and happy, prosperous homes for themselves by helping her raise immense wheat crops to feed the world.

You Can Get a Homestead of 160 Acres Free or other lands at very low prices. Where you can buy good farm land at $15 to $30 per acre that will raise 20 to 45 bushels of $2 wheat to the acre—it's easy to become prosperous. Canadian farmers also grow wonderful crops of Oats, Barley and Flax. Mixed Farming is fully as profitable an industry as grain raising. The excellent grasses, full of nutrition, are the only food required either for beef or dairy purposes. Good schools and churches; markets convenient; climate excellent. MORE CENTRAL BODIES OF FARMERS URGED.

PLAN FOR MORE CENTRAL BODIES

One of Country's Needs, Says Secretary of Agriculture in Recent Statement.

STRENGTHEN FARM BUREAUS

War Proved Power of Organizations That Plan Farm Work in Communities—More Than a Million Members Enrolled.

One of the points of strength in America's agricultural organization has been found during the war to be central organizations of farmers to plan and develop the best methods of farming for their region. That these organizations are to be of even greater usefulness in the era of peace is indicated in a recent statement addressed by the secretary of agriculture to the farmers and agricultural forces of the United States.

As one thing that seems clear, the secretary noted the need of perfecting the organization of agricultural agencies for the purpose of intelligently executing such a program as may seem wise.

"We should not only have the best possible organization and co-operation of the department of agriculture, the agricultural colleges, the state departments of agriculture and farmers' associations," said the secretary, "but we should especially strengthen the local farm bureaus and other organizations which support so effectively the extension forces and assist them in their activities. The perfecting of this organization is highly desirable, not only during the continuance of the present abnormal conditions, but also for the future. The local, as well as the state and federal agencies, are of supreme importance to the nation in all its activities designed to make rural life more profitable, healthful and attractive, and, therefore, to secure adequate economic production, efficient distribution and necessary conservation."

Supporting County Agent Work.

The county organizations, known as county councils, county bureaus of agriculture, or farm bureaus, often employ a county and a home demonstration agent and aid them in their work. They usually are composed of farmers and others in the county interested in agriculture.

At present there are more than 1,000,000 farmers who are members of organizations assisting the county agent in his work.

In the South.

In the South special emphasis is laid upon community organizations of farmers. These are increasing rapidly and involve the work among men, women and children. The tendency and general policy of the work in most of the Southern states is gradually to form central county organizations, composed of representatives of the community organizations, to deal, in co-operation with the county agents, with such problems as are county-wide in their nature.

Farm Bureaus in the North.

In the Northern and Western states the county organization is usually known as a farm bureau. The farm bureau is a nonpartisan, nonsectarian, nonsecret organization representing the whole farming population of a county, men and women alike, and acting as a clearing house for every other association interested in work with rural people. Its primary purposes are:

(1) To bring to the agent the counsel and advice of the best farmers in the county as to what ought to be done and how to do it.

(2) To provide an organization for easily and quickly reaching every community in the county with information of value to that community or to the county as a whole.

(3) To provide a plan for organized self-help, enlisting the co-operation of all farmers interested in carrying out a county agricultural program of work.

Membership is open to all residents of the county directly interested in agriculture, men and women alike. A small membership fee (usually $1) is charged.

While the original conception of the farm bureau was as an aid to county agent work, it was quickly realized that it has a broader field, and now it is coming to be recognized as the official agricultural body interested in promoting all that pertains to a better and more prosperous rural life.

How to Organize.

Farmers interested in organizing county central bodies to work for better agriculture may obtain plans and other information from their state extension director at the state agricultural college, or from the states relations service, United States department of agriculture.

Finding Good Ground Water.

Good ground water is the ideal supply for farms, according to Farmers' Bulletin 941, "Water Systems for Farm Homes," recently issued by the United States department of agriculture.

Any farmer about to put down a deep or expensive well, and who is uncertain of the depth and the quantity or quality of the water likely to be encountered, should describe fully the location and conditions of his project to national or state geological authorities and ask for advice. Times without number, wells have been sunk to great depths in the belief that eventually a plentiful supply would be reached, only to find that water was not there, or that it was unfit for use, or that a mere hole or sump had been created which served but to drain water from relatively near the surface. There is no short cut and no better guide in this matter than information as to the kind, thickness, porosity, and dip of the strata of the region and of the results obtained in neighboring wells, study of the land slopes and character of the vegetation, and examination for evidences of seeps and springs.

Regarding the use of a forked willow, hazel, or peach stick for locating underground water, it can be said safely the method is without merit, although so-called forked-stick artists from their experience and observation of surface conditions usually are better able to judge of the probabilities of ground water than is the average person not thus trained. So also, there is little to recommend certain patented automatic water finders which are based upon the possible, but largely conjectural, proposition that electrical exchanges between the earth and atmosphere are stronger in the vicinity of subterranean waters.

HOW TO TRANSFER BEES

The keeping of bees in boxhives or log "gums" is unprofitable. The care that bees need in order to gather a fair crop of honey can be given only if the beekeeper is able to examine the the bees and to move the combs as needed.

Probably one-third of all the bees in the United States are in hives without movable combs, and to assist the owners of such colonies to get them in proper hives the United States department of agriculture has prepared Farmers' Bulletin 961, "Transferring Bees to Modern Hives." Various methods are given, some one of which will be possible to any beekeeper, so that there is no reason for delay in making the bees productive.

Unless the bees are properly managed after transfer there is little advantage in movable-frame hives. This requires a study of beekeeping as well as promptness and care. Directions for handling bees are given in other publications of the department.

COUNTY AGENTS AID STOCK INDUSTRY.

MUCH AID GIVEN STOCK INDUSTRY

Extension Service Provided Effective Means of Disseminating Needed Facts.

HELP FROM COUNTY AGENTS

Stockmen and Dairymen in All Parts of Country Assisted in Solving Their Problems and Increasing Production.

When it became essential to organize the agricultural forces of the United States on a war basis and to instruct both city and country people how best to increase, utilize and conserve the limited food supply, it was immediately recognized that the co-operative extension system, with its combination of federal and state administrative officers and specialists, with county agents, farm bureaus and other local organizations, provided a very effective means for nation-wide dissemination of the needed facts, as well as for practical demonstrations of the measures required to increase agricultural production and to secure the most economical utilization of the products of the farms.

The war found American agriculture prepared with an extension organization well begun, and immediate steps were taken to put the extension service on a war basis. On April 1, 1917, the extension workers in the United States numbered 2,149, of which 1,461 were county agents, 545 home demonstration agents, and 143 club workers. On July 1, 1918, the total number had increased to 6,216, including 3,001 in county agent work, 2,304 in home demonstration work, and 1,181 boys' and girls' club workers.

County Agent Work in South.

An important part of the food production campaign was to increase live stock production. In this, as in the other work of the campaign, all of the divisions of the extension service have taken a prominent part. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, county agents in the 15 Southern states conducted feeding demonstrations with 18,598 beef cattle. Through their efforts 58,007 beef cattle were brought into the territory for breeding purposes. They conducted 30,041 demonstrations in the feeding and management of swine, assisted in building 2,256 dipping vats which were needed in the eradication of the cattle fever tick and which played an important part in making this year a record in stamping out the parasite in Southern states. Through the efforts of the county agents in the South 5,517 silos were built. They instructed 56,031 farmers in the better care of farm manure, thus preventing a waste of a valuable source of soil fertility. By co-operating with county agents in the drought-stricken areas of Texas the Southern county agents assisted in transporting 300,000 head of cattle from sections where feed was scarce to sections in the Southeastern states where feed and pasture were plentiful.

The boys' club workers in the Southern states organized 2,968 calf clubs, 31,375 pig clubs and 11,633 poultry clubs.

County Agent Work in North and West.

The county agents in the 33 Northern and Western states supervised demonstrations with 149,820 head of live stock. Realizing the importance of conserving succulent feed, especially for dairy cows, the county agents in several states carried on definite campaigns to encourage farmers to build silos, which resulted in 7,245 silos being erected. Silo-building campaigns were carried on most intensively by the county agents in Indiana, Wisconsin, Iowa and Pennsylvania. Reports received from county agents indicated that nearly a third of a million acres of silage corn was grown last year at their suggestion in the Northern and Western states.

The production of more and better live stock with less expensive feed and greater profit to the producers has received considerable attention in nearly all counties. During 1917 the agents in the Northern and Western states assisted in the organization of 160 livestock breeders' associations to encourage the use of better sires, and 182 cow-testing associations to eliminate unprofitable cows and bring about more economical feeding. Through these associations and those organized with the assistance of agents in previous years, 127,835 cows were under test, resulting in at least 8,724 cows being discarded as unprofitable. Primarily through these organizations 10,986 farmers were induced to adopt balanced rations for their herds, and the following number of head of registered stock were secured at suggestion of agents: Bulls, 3,285; cows, 4,836; rams, 1,469, and boars, 2,974. The agent also brought about the transfer to other herds of 3,370 valuable registered sires by means of information given to individual farmers or through exchange lists published by the farm bureaus.

In order to increase the production of live stock in the Northern and Western states to meet the war needs, farmers were encouraged by personal conferences, at meetings, and through circular letters and newspaper articles to raise more live stock, resulting in more than 40,000 additional head of cattle, more than 100,000 additional hogs, and 148,211 sheep being raised or placed on farms. In some states a special effort was made to save calves from being slaughtered for veal, resulting in 10,499 additional calves being raised. This work was carried on most extensively in Wisconsin, from which 2,459 head of calves from high-grade or registered stock were shipped for breeding stock to Missouri, Wyoming and other Western and Southern states, due to this campaign.

Aid in Control of Diseases.

The control of live-stock diseases was considered fully as important as growing more live stock, and the agents in the Northern and Western states were instrumental in having 36,392 animals, principally cows, tested for tuberculosis; 197,508 animals were vaccinated for blackleg, and 235,866 hogs were vaccinated for cholera by farmers or veterinarians at the suggestion of agents, or by agents, for the purpose of demonstrating methods.

There are 1,664 counties in the 33 Northern and Western states, and of these 1,162 counties, or 69 per cent of the entire number, had regularly organized club work during the year. There were 4,376 members of poultry clubs, who managed 29,541 fowls, hatched 106,358 chicks, and produced 35,370 dozen eggs. The pig clubs had a membership of 7,382 boys and girls, who managed 10,583 animals, producing 1,797,196 pounds of pork.

LIVE STOCK NEED

In an appeal recently addressed to the farmers and agricultural forces of the United States, Secretary of Agriculture D. F. Houston says:

"For a considerable period the world will have need particularly of a larger supply than normal of live stock, and especially of fats. We should not fail, therefore, to adopt every feasible means of economically increasing our live-stock products. As a part of our program we should give due thought to the securing of an adequate supply of feedstuffs and to the eradication and control of all forms of animal disease."

Shippers' Forecasts.

During the winter season officers in charge of nearly all the weather bureau stations issue daily what are known as "shippers' forecasts," giving the minimum temperature expected to occur with a shipping radius of 24 to 36 hours from the station. These forecasts are published on postal cards and will be mailed to shippers at stations near the weather bureau office. Watch the forecast and save losses in food shipments.

Coughs and Colds Quickly Relieved

At the first sign of a cold or cough, commence treatment immediately with the best procurable remedy. Schiffmann's Expectorant is guaranteed to be the best and most satisfactory remedy ever used, or money refunded in case it should not prove so. It is so strongly concentrated that 50 cents worth makes 64 teaspoonsful, when mixed at home with honey or sugar syrup. Positively contains no Chloroform, Opium, Morphine or any other narcotic. Pleasant to take and children are fond of it. Druggists everywhere will refund money if it does not give perfect satisfaction, or is not found the very best ever used for Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Croup, Whooping Cough, or Hoarseness. You will be the sole judge and under this positive guarantee absolutely no risk is run in buying the remedy.

The Farmer Receives More Than Five Thousand Dollars a Minute From Swift & Company

This amount is paid to the farmer for live stock, by Swift & Company alone, during the trading hours of every business day.

All this money is paid to the farmer through the open market in competition with large and small packers, shippers, speculators and dealers.

The farmer, feeder, or shipper receives every cent of this money ($300,000 an hour, nearly $2,000,000 a day, $11,500,000 a week) in cash, on the spot, as soon as the stock he has just sold is weighed up.

Some of the money paid to the farmer during a single day comes back to the company in a month from sale of products; much does not come back for sixty or ninety days or more. But the next day Swift & Company, to meet the demands made by its customers, must pay out another $2,000,000 or so, and at the present high price levels keeps over $250,000,000 continuously tied up in goods on the way to market and in bills owed to the company.

This gives an idea of the volume of the Swift & Company business and the requirements of financing it. Only by doing a large business can this company turn live stock into meat and by-products at the lowest possible cost, prevent waste, operate refrigerator cars, distribute to retailers in all parts of the country — and be recompensed with a profit of only a fraction of a cent a pound—a profit too small to have any noticeable effect on the price of meat or live stock.

Landlord's Experience With Glando

Mr. Haushalter, the well known and energetic proprietor of the Hotel Paulding, Paulding, Ohio, says that for several years he suffered from a sluggish liver, backache and kidney trouble. He felt so drowsy and languid he could scarcely drag. He says: "I tried a number of kidney pills and liver remedies and found no relief until I used Glando, the great gland tonic. It proved to be just what I needed. I am thoroughly convinced I would have been flat on my back if I had not used this treatment; but, instead of being laid up, I am feeling fine and looking after my business every day. If I feel any indication of my old trouble returning, I take a Glando treatment and that sets me right."

Mr. Haushalter was dying of self-poisoning caused by an inactive liver. This weakened the kidneys and other glands of the body. If he had not found a remedy that renewed glandular activity and removed the poison, his life undoubtedly have paid the penalty.

Glando Tonic is the only remedy of its kind on the market and its numerous cures is proof enough of its great value to mankind. It is sold by druggists or will be sent direct by the Gland-Aid Co., Fort Wayne, Ind. Large treatment, $1.00.

RED CROSS SANTA TO FILL SOLDIERS' SOCKS

An Old Fashioned Celebration of Yuletide for American Soldiers in France.

A Christmas tree in every ward of every American hospital and in every hospital recreation hut in France!

Every wounded or sick American fighting man to receive two socks filled to the brim with fruits, nuts, candy and smokes!

These are the most interesting features of a tentative Christmas celebration program for the American hospitals arranged by the American Red Cross in France in co-operation with the commanding officers of our fighting forces in that country. Details of the plan to make Christmas as merry as possible for the soldiers in these institutions have just been received at Red Cross headquarters. Nurses and enlisted men on duty at these places will also share in the distribution of Christmas cheer. Because of the limited amount of available shipping space the Red Cross was compelled to abandon its original plan to send special Christmas parcels from here to soldier patients in France. All the articles distributed will be obtained over there.

This is to be an old fashioned celebration in every sense of the word. Every soldier will hang his socks on the tree. The socks will be tied with red ribbon and in addition to the goodies mentioned above will contain a handkerchief and a card, on which will be outlined the services the American Red Cross is prepared to render our soldiers. Each soldier will receive a sufficient number of Christmas postcards—now being designed by artists in the Red Cross service—to enable him to write to members of his family and his friends back home.

The Christmas dinner, of course, will be one of the features of the celebration. After dinner there will be musical entertainment, motion pictures and general singing.

NEWVILLE

Hugh Traxler and brother Terry are both suffering with influenza.

The school is closed here this week as both teachers have the influenza.

Mrs. Dixon, who got a broken arm in a recent auto accident, was quite ill last week.

The executive committee of the local Union met with Mrs. John Miller, Wednesday afternoon

Henry Herrick had a slight stroke of paralysis one day last week, making one arm and hand almost useless.

Miss Bell Crum of Chicago, came the first of last week and took her mother, Mrs. Jane Crum, home with her for the winter.

The Misses Dortha Warner and Thelma Benninghoff and Messrs Don Keller and Ray Kraft motored to Auburn, Sunday, and spent the evening with Mrs. Sarah King and family.

McKinley Beree has received his discharge from the service and came home last week. Mrs. Beree has been with him at Camp Taylor ever since he was taken seriously ill with pneumonia, and they came home together.

Newville was saddened last week by learning the sad fate of our boys in France. Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Harter received a telegram stating that their son Ray is in the hospital, seriously wounded. He was one of the boys who went over during last summer. Besides his parents he has two brothers, Charles and Willie Harter of Newville and he also has 3 sisters and also a brother Louis who is in the service in England having enlisted several years ago. He is a Red Cross auto driver

Thursday morning Mrs. Whitehurst received a telegram telling her of the death of her son Walter who died at the hospital of wounds received while in action. Walter was the son of John and Mary Whitehurst and left the same time that Ray Harter did. Beside the broken hearted mother, Walter leaves three sisters, Mrs. Hazel Tustison, of St. Joe; Mrs. Lucile Shroyer of Concord and Mrs. Inez Kramer, his twin sister, who, with her little daughter, resides in the home with her mother. The father and four sisters preceded him to the world beyond. Walter was a good boy and it was so hard for his widowed mother to give him up as the supreme sacrifice, but he died for his country. He was 25 years of age.

Jake Friend, another Newville boy, is reported in the hospital, seriously gassed.

Since the last fierce charge a number of the boys have not been heard from. God only knows what their fate has been We can only wait aud pray God to help us bear the tedious hours.

Omer Ayers was officially reported missing, but this proved to be a mistake, as Mr. and Mrs. Harry Ayers, the parents, received a letter from him, Thursday, dated Nov. 15, or about that date, stating that he was alright. The Hicksville paper published the notice of his death, stating Mr. and Mrs. Ayers as their authority. This was a mistake, as the parents never gave him up for dead, but thought he might be in some hospital, wounded, or perhaps in a German prison, but their unhappiness was turned to joy upon receipt of his letter.

LATER—Mr. and Mrs. Harter received a letter from their son Ray, who was wounded. He says he is getting better and expects to be able to get home before long.

A letter was also received from Byron Miller, in which he states he is well and uninjured. The letter was dated Nov. 14. This brings joy to at least two homes, as there has been very much anxiety, but those who have received good news are not void of sympathy for those who have lost their loved ones over there.

RED CROSS FIGHTS DEADLY EPIDEMIC

Besides the special work conducted by hundreds of Red Cross Chapters throughout the country in checking the recent epidemic of Spanish Influenza, the organization through its headquarters at Washington is preparing to fight a repetition of the experience that was so disastrous this fall, educating the public thoroughly regarding the symptoms and the proper care at the beginning of an attack. In addition to this, the American Red Cross is fighting tuberculosis. The recent appropriation to the National Tuberculosis Association will be used for educational as well as relief work throughout the country.

So much has been said about the aftermath of the epidemic that especial attention is being given to the work along this line. The weakness which follows influenza leaves the patient in a condition which makes him a good field for the germs of tuberculosis. A thorough physical examination, proper food and clothing, the use of mild preventives, will check the progress of the disease at once.

Tuberculosis, or consumption, as it is frequently called, is both preventable and curable, provided the treatment of the disease is begun before it is too far advanced. Medicine plays a comparatively small part. The frequently advertised "consumption cures" should be looked upon as poison. The only medicine which should be taken is a good tonic which will stimulate the appetite and build up the system generally. The main cure lies in proper food, sufficient rest, fresh air and sunlight and living, if possible, according to the plan prescribed by a good physician. This renews the patient's vitality and soon kills the disease entirely.

For several years the National Tuberculosis Association has been financing its work by the sale of Red Cross seals at Christmas time. The seals sold for a penny each and by making a concerted effort enough money was usually raised to carry the work through the year. This year there will be no seals sold because the American Red Cross has made an appropriation for the anti-tuberculosis work, and those who formerly spent their time selling seals will join in the work for the Red Cross Christmas Roll Call during the week of December 16 to 23.

SONG OF LITTLE THINGS.

By Jeanne Judson.

This is the song of little things,
A clean, white bed in a quiet place,
A cigarette and the saving grace
Of smiles that illumine the nurse's face—
These are the joys the Red Cross brings.

This is the song of little things,
An old man brought to his home again,
And children who play, forgetting pain,
A hut that shelters from mud and rain—
This is the rest the Red Cross brings.
